ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This company is formed to acquire and develop the freehold property known as the Wolverine Silver Mine, situate in the New Silver Region in the district of Thunder Bay, province of Ontario, Dominion of Canada, containing 80 acres or thereabouts of valuable mineral land, lying three-quarters of a mile north of White Fish Lake and in the very heart of the extraordinarily rich silver-bearing district where to-day are working the celebrated Rabbit, Beaver, Porcupine, Badger, Queen, Silver Mountain, and other mines, the richness of whose products is now believed to be surpassing that of all other silver mines, even those of the rich Silver Region of Nevada.

The Wolverine adjoins the Queen Silver Mine, which is turning out ore at 120ft. from surface of a high grade, stated to be yielding up to as much as 4,000oz. of silver to the ton. The same fissure veins run through the Wolverine, and are known and proved on other lodes.

A remarkable feature attending the silver veins of Ontario is their extraordinary well-defined bearing, combined with increased richness in depth, thereby rendering their development free from the uncertainties which affect mines in other districts.

Mr. J. Gray, the well-known civil and mining engineer, says: "The Port Arthur or Thunder Bay section has developed more than double the wealth in the shortest time, and for the least outlay of any silver region in the world. This is an accomplished fact."

The directors refrain from giving any elaborate estimate as to dividends, but it will be seen that, even taking Mr. Roland's figures of 150oz. to the ton at 40ft. from surface, the returns should be very large, and that with the increased value in depth very gratifying returns should be forthcoming.

The purchase money for the whole freehold property is £[illegible] in cash and £37,000 in fully-paid shares, or partly in cash and partly in shares, as the directors determine. The balance of authorised capital, viz., £[illegible], remains for working purposes, but this sum is considerably over the amount deemed necessary, so that the directors propose at present to issue only £[illegible], reserving £[illegible] for future issue.

The only contracts entered into are: See full prospectus.

The Buenos Ayres New Tramways Company (Limited) has been incorporated for the purpose of acquiring and carrying into effect the concession, dated 27th March, 1888, granted by the Municipality of the City of Buenos Ayres to Messrs. Peter A. Gartland and Company, authorising the establishment of a line of tramways in that city of about 25 miles, including the running over of about 3½ miles of existing lines.

This concession has been granted by the municipality in view of the great demand for increased facilities of locomotion. The population of the city has almost doubled since the last important tramway was built, and at present numbers 450,000 inhabitants. The term of the concession is 60 years, at the end of which period the undertaking and rolling stock, &c. (but not the buildings), become municipal property.

According to published returns for 1887, the average net revenue for that year of the three existing English tramway companies in Buenos Ayres, after deducting loss on exchange, was £[illegible] per mile, viz.:

Anglo-Argentine Tramways Company (Limited)	£1,[illegible]
Buenos Ayres and Belgrano Tramways Company (Limited)	2,419
City of Buenos Ayres Tramways Company (Limited)	[illegible]

[illegible]

The preference shares are made redeemable, at the option of the company or the shareholders, after 1st January, 1899, in order to ensure to the latter the return of their capital with 20 per cent. premium before the period when the concession will expire. The money required for the redemption is to be provided by an annual reserve fund out of profits, during the 10 years next after the extinction of the debenture debt in 1929.

A contract, dated 24th October, 1888, has been entered into between the company of the one part and William Leslie Merrill and Francis Arthur Bowen of the other part, whereby in consideration of the debentures and shares, or the proceeds thereof, the contractors undertake to procure the transfer of the concession to the company, to build up and equip all the tramways comprised in the concession, with suitable stabling, buildings, and rolling stock, and the necessary land, all to the satisfaction of the company's engineer, by the 1st October, 1890. The contractors also engage to pay all the expenses of the formation and registration of the company, and £[illegible] for administration during construction and working capital. The interest on the debentures and preference shares is guaranteed for two years from the first general allotment, although the lines are expected to be completed in 18 months.

The total capital of the company is as follows:

Five per Cent. Debentures	£250,000
Six per Cent. Preference Shares	150,000
Ordinary Shares	75,000
	£475,000

The above contract, the concession and ordinance relating thereto, the memorandum and articles of association, the forms of the trust deed and preference share certificate, an agreement dated 18th August, 1888, between Messrs. Peter A. Gartland and Co. and Messrs. Heinemann and Co., and two agreements dated 24th October, 1888, between Messrs. Merrill and Bowen and Messrs. Heinemann and Co., as to the present issue and the payment of interest during construction, and other documents, may be inspected at the offices of the solicitors of the company, and subscribers will be deemed to have had notice thereof, and of any other existing contracts within the meaning of Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, and to have waived any further compliance with that section.

Prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained of the Consolidated Bank (Limited), and at the offices of the company, and of Messrs. Heinemann and Co. Applications should be forwarded to Messrs. Heinemann and Co., and cheques be made payable to them, and crossed to the "Consolidated Bank (Limited)." 62, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, E.C., 25th October, 1888.

AVOID INFERIOR IMITATIONS.—New schools, and those with cheap fees (very dear for the return to their pupils), which are a confusion and an apology for a want of facilities and experience in producing efficient writers. (Beginners do not know what facilities a shorthand school should possess.) But sooner or later their students discover this, and are at the additional expense of completing here. Anything short of practical efficiency is worthless, and means time and money wasted. This school owes its premier position to the fact that it devotes the energies of its large staff to the one subject, Shorthand.

THEREFORE the METROPOLITAN SCHOOL'S RESULTS are the HIGHEST KNOWN. Soc. of Arts and Pitman's certificates. Its total exceeds that of all other schools in England combined. One thousand certificates recently obtained. Public reporting gold medal competition, all medals awarded. Tuition and practice until completed to pupils' satisfaction for a fixed fee. Prospectus post free.—27, Chancery-lane.

OLDEST and LARGEST SCHOOL. Estd. 1870. (Highest exam. results in the world.) Business men taught any time they can call. Private tuition. No class teaching. Separate school for boys. Prospectus post free.—27, Chancery-lane.

LADIES.—A large SHORTHAND SCHOOL, with separate teaching staff. Appointments.—Ladies, gentlemen, youths, and young men can be immediately placed, employers preferring our practically trained pupils. The City Press says: "This school is the powerful factor for supplying shorthand assistants." Prospectus post free.—27, Chancery-lane.

BEST GIFT for a BOY: This SCHOOL'S COURSE of LESSONS. Tutors say boys knowing shorthand do best at all exams. To enable youths and gentlemen without business experience to take appointments, there is a separate school for [illegible].

MONEY MARKET.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

A somewhat firmer tendency is shown in discounts, and the general rate for three months' bills is 3 per cent. Early in the day Treasury drafts expiring about Jan. 7 were offered at 2⅞ per cent., but no transactions were reported. Short loans were in rather better demand at 2, ½ per cent., and the charge to cover the settlement was 2¾, 3. The banks obtained 4½ per cent. for their Stock Exchange advances in the morning, but later the rate fell to 4, and money was abundant. As opinions regarding the result of the Bank Court to-morrow were conflicting, the market generally was somewhat unsettled. The Bank has been taking paper both here and in the provinces much below the "minimum," and the 5 per cent. rate has no influence on the exchanges. But the immediate effect of a movement to 4 per cent. would be a fresh reduction in deposit rates, increased competition for bills, and probably a demand for gold for Germany. The French exchange, however, was higher this afternoon. Except St. Petersburg, where the private rate of discount is still as high as 7 per cent., outside terms here are now considerably below those current abroad, the difference compared with the Paris quotation, for instance, being as much as 1 per cent. Although there is no immediate demand for bullion for export, about £750,000 will soon be withdrawn for Scotland, and new Argentine loans are about to be launched, including, it is understood, a Santa Fé issue for about two millions sterling. With a 4 per cent. rate the discount houses would probably allow 2½, ¾ per cent. for deposits at call and notice, or ½ per cent. lower.

Business in the stock markets was mainly confined to the settlement, which indicated, as expected, a much larger supply of money. Rates of continuation were accordingly lower all round, yet prices were flatter, despite the favourable tenor of Mr. W. H. Smith's remarks on the political situation and the issue of good traffic returns by the leading English lines. Late in the day quotations were prejudiced by the failure of an outside broker who had a large speculative account open for the rise in various securities. Some of the foreign bonds gave way, notwithstanding a firmer tendency on the Bourses. Argentine, Buenos Ayres, Greek, Spanish, Uruguayan, and Venezuelan were all flatter. Peruvian opened firm, but afterwards relapsed on speculative realisations, and closed a little worse than yesterday. On the other hand, Ecuador, Egyptian, Hungarian, Italian, Turkish, and Russian of 1873 were in request, at an improvement. The supply of the latter was very small, and the "contango" was equal to only ½ per cent. per annum. Consols receded 1-16 to ⅛ per cent., while Colonial Government debentures were again better.

Home railways declined, due to the difficulties already referred to. Carrying-over rates in this department, although less, were still stiff, and a considerable amount of stock was sold by recent speculative buyers. South-Eastern "A" and North British Deferred fell about ½ each, and other stocks ⅛ to ⅜. Lancashire and Yorkshire, Metropolitan, and Midland were in demand. The important increases apparent in some of the traffics are stated to be chiefly due to large purchases of coal in fear of a great strike amongst the colliers. American railroads were inactive; a few shares rose ⅛ to ⅜, and Illinois Central and Norfolk and Western Preference fell ½ each. Grand Trunks showed firmness, and Mexican Ordinary and Second Preference rose about ½. Nitrates were likewise up, as well as South African Exploration and Suez Canal. The only noteworthy movement in banks was a fall of ½ in New Zealand. Amongst miscellaneous Hotchkiss Ordinary, Allsopp's, and Guinness's relapsed, but the securities of the New York Brewery were higher. Salt Union rose ⅛, to 5⅛, ⅛ prem. A fresh improvement took place in diamond shares, including Kimberley Central and De Beers, while South African gold were lower, notably Salisbury, which fell 2⅛. Copper mines slightly receded.

At the Bank £7,000 in gold was received, making a total influx for the week of £22,000.

The Spartan, from the Cape, has brought £8,023 in specie; and the France has reached St. Nazaire, from Colon and the West Indies, with £37,920.

In spite of higher Eastern exchanges, bar silver declined ⅛d, to 43⅛d per ounce. The Council allotments were less favourable than expected, through the sale by an Indian railway company of 14 lakhs of transfers at 1s 4 9-16d. Bombay and Calcutta transfers rose 1-16d, to 1s 4 9-16d, and bills in Shanghai ⅛d, to 4s 3⅛d. Four and a Half per Cent. Rupee Paper at 71⅛, ⅛, and the Four per Cents. at 67⅛, were ⅛ lower.

Continental Bourses were firmer. At Berlin Hungarian Rentes, Austrian Credit, Deutsche Bank, and Lombardo improved, and Prussian Three and a Half and Four per Cents., Turkish, and Mexican gave way. The Vienna market was steadier. In Paris an advance was apparent in Suez Canal, Panama, Ottoman Bank, Rio Tinto, Egyptian, Italian, Greek, and Portuguese. The Three per Cent. Rentes rose 7½c, to 82f 50c, and the Four and a Half per Cents. remained at 105f 70c. The exchange on London (cheques) was 1c up, at 25f 33c.

Subscriptions will be received by Messrs. Heinemann and Co. for 30,000 Cumulative Six per Cent. Preference Shares of £5 each, and £250,000 Five per Cent. Debentures of £100 each of the Buenos Ayres New Tramways Company (Limited). The former are offered at par, and the latter at 97 per cent. This undertaking has been incorporated to acquire and carry into effect a concession granted by the Municipality of Buenos Ayres for the establishment of a line of tramways in that city, about twenty-five miles in length, including running powers over about two and a half miles of existing lines. The list will be closed on or before Tuesday next.

A Reuter's telegram from Buenos Ayres, dated yesterday, states that the premium on gold has declined to 47·75 per ct.

Tenders were received at the Bank of England for £300,000 India Council Bills and Telegraphic Transfers, and the following allotments were made: Bills on Calcutta, £190,700; and on Bombay, £109,300. Tenders at 1s 4 17-32d will receive about 26 per ct. of the amount applied for; above in full. A special allotment of Bills on Calcutta to the amount of £1,000, at 1s 4 19-32d, was subsequently made. The total of Bills and Transfers sold from April 1 to yesterday was Rs.10,35,50,806, realising £7,007,124. Next week tenders will again be received for £300,000 nominal.

The Home railway traffic returns for the past week exhibit the following differences: Increases—Caledonian, £4,658; Eastern and Midlands, £166; Great Northern, £3,139; Great Western, £5,710; London and North-Western, £7,807; London and South-Western, £1,843; London, Chatham, and Dover, £607; Manchester and Sheffield, £1,422; Metropolitan, £714; Midland, £7,127; North British, £3,198; North-Eastern, £8,742; and North Staffordshire, £378. Decrease—Hull and Barnsley, £489.

With £5,363 brought down, the half-yearly report of the Scottish Australian Mining Company (Limited) shows a balance of profit amounting to £19,477. The directors propose the payment of a dividend at the rate of 15 per ct. per annum, leaving £7,477 to be carried forward.

At a meeting of the directors of the West India and Panama Telegraph Company (Limited), held to-day, it was decided to recommend a dividend of 12s per share on account of arrears of dividend on the first preference shares, placing £2,000 to reserve, and carrying forward £1,256.

On and after Oct. 25 the English Association of American Bond and Share Holders (Limited) are prepared to pay Coupon No. 1 on their certificates, against the Preferred shares of the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company for the dividend of 1½ per ct., payable on that day.

It is announced that the available profits of the London Chartered Bank of Australia, for the half-year ended June 30 last, amount to £64,655, out of which the directors recommend a dividend at the rate of 7 per ct. per annum, and an addition of £20,000 to reserve fund, raising it to £200,000. The sum left to be carried forward is £3,655.

An extraordinary general meeting of the Puerto Cabello and Valencia Railway Company (Limited) is called for Nov. 8 to pass a resolution authorising the directors to accept and register transfers made between the Municipality of Valencia, the Municipality of Puerto Cabello, the Bank of Carabobo, and the State of Carabobo on the one hand and the Government of Venezuela on the other.

For the past week the tramway traffic returns show the following differences as compared with 1887: Increases—North Metropolitan, £273; London, £112; London Street, £162; London Southern, £9; Provincial, £729; Belfast, £248; Woolwich and South-East London, £18; Bristol, £247; Imperial, £38; North London, £78; West Metropolitan, £56; Southwark and Deptford, £3; Sunderland, £36; Swansea, £33; Dublin, £74; Calais, £17; Burnley, £20; Hull, £58; Edinburgh, £110; Continental Metropolitan, £186; France, £10; Germany, £133; and South London, £6. Decreases—Southampton, £15; Stockton and Darlington, £15; North Staffordshire, £8; Calcutta, £106; Gothenburg, £3; and Bordeaux, £81. The London Road-Car Company's receipts for the week ended Oct. 20 were £2,340, against £2,115 in 1887.

We are informed that the applications for the issue of 25,000 (part of 50,000) shares of £10 each of the Bank of New Zealand were for considerably more than double the number offered for subscription, and that letters of allotment and regret will be sent out as soon as possible.

It is intimated that the last portion of the letters of allotment and regret of the Salt Union (Limited) was posted this (Wednesday) evening.

A cablegram received by the Colombian Hydraulic Mining Company (Limited) states that the net profit for the month of September was £680. The net profit of the Orita Gold Mines (Limited) for the same period was £800.

The approximate gross earnings of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad for the third week of October were $169,700, against $174,000 for the corresponding week in 1887.

It is notified that the list of applications for shares in the Portuguese Consolidated Copper Mines (Limited) will close to-morrow (Thursday) at noon, and that country applications arriving by Friday morning's post will be considered.

The traffic receipts of the London General Omnibus Company (Limited) for the week ending Oct. 21 were

RAILWAY TRAFFIC RETURNS.

THE PARNELL COMMISSION.

Sir James Hannen and his colleagues, Mr. Justice Day and Mr. Justice Smith, held their fourth sitting yesterday. The proceedings were marked by rather more variety than had characterised the previous meetings of the Court, and there was an obvious development of general interest in the long indictment which the Attorney-General is engaged in formulating. At the commencement of business there were few persons present besides those actively engaged in the conduct of the inquiry, but the attendance increased from hour to hour, and eventually the Probate Court became crowded. The opening of the Michaelmas sittings doubtless had something to do with the augmentation of the number of spectators, as many well-known barristers who had been present at the ceremony in the Great Hall besieged the office of Mr. Cunynghame, the Secretary of the Commission, in order to obtain tickets of admission for themselves and the ladies by whom they were accompanied. Prominent among the visitors during the day were the Earl of Kilmorey, Sir William Grove (who, as an ex-Judge, was accommodated with a seat on the bench), Mr. O. V. Morgan, M.P., Mr. Labouchere, M.P., Mr. Channing, M.P., Dr. Fox, M.P., Mr. Cobb, M.P., and Mr. Philip Callan (ex-M.P. for Louth). All the counsel concerned in the case were in attendance throughout the day, with the exception of Sir Henry James, who was compelled by other engagements to occasionally absent himself. Mr. Buckle and Mr. Macdonald, editor and manager of the Times, accompanied their solicitor, Mr. Soames, on the other side of whom sat Mr. George Lewis, the solicitor of the Irish party. There were also in the well of the court Mr. Biggar, M.P., and Mr. Michael Davitt, whilst Mr. Henry Campbell, M.P. (Mr. Parnell's private secretary), occupied a seat on one of the side benches.

On the appearance of the judges punctually at half-past ten o'clock, Sir Charles Russell renewed his twice-postponed application in reference to the discovery or disclosure of documents, his contention, founded on an affidavit sworn by Mr. Lewis, being that the Times was in possession of certain letters, other than those of which they had delivered particulars, purporting to be written and signed by Mr. Dillon, Mr. Parnell, and Mr. Biggar. These, he urged, ought to be discovered. Mr. Reid, Q.C., followed on the same side. For the Times it was admitted that they were in possession of a bundle of documents in a box—documents which had been acquired for the purposes of the defence in the action of "O'Donnell v. Walter"—and the Attorney-General contended that his opponents were not entitled to have these papers. He professed the utmost willingness to make all the disclosures which the Court might think necessary, but insisted that he was at least entitled to an affidavit specifying what documents were required. The point was argued for more than half-an-hour, Sir Charles Russell hinting, not obscurely, that his object was to find out whether the Times had not had foisted upon them a number of documents, some of which they had discovered not to be genuine. Obviously, if some were admittedly forgeries it would strengthen the suggestion that the others ought to be classed in the same category. Ultimately it was agreed that the Commissioners should themselves examine the documents before deciding whether or not they should be disclosed. The next question raised, also by Sir Charles Russell and Mr. Reid, was as to whether the Times should not be compelled to furnish further particulars as to the illegal acts which they alleged to be due to the suggestion or prompting of the Land League or individual members of the Irish party. Whilst this matter was under discussion, Mr. Davitt rose at the solicitors' table, and asked to be allowed an opportunity of answering before the Commission the serious charges made against himself in the course of the O'Donnell libel suit. The President at once satisfied the applicant by assuring him that he should be put in exactly the same position and have the same advantages as the persons represented by counsel. Then Mr. Biggar, who is also appearing in person, applied that further particulars should be furnished in regard to the charges against himself. The Attorney-General showed cause why his clients should not be called on to do what was asked, and after a protracted and somewhat technical discussion, Sir James Hannen briefly conferred with his colleagues, and announced that at present they saw no reason for ordering additional particulars to be furnished. A significant intimation was then made by the Attorney-General to the effect that the Hibernian Bank had disobeyed the direction of the Court to produce their bank books, and the President observed upon this that, if the order was not ultimately complied with, the Commissioners would "have recourse to their powers," which, it may be observed, include the right to arrest and punish the contumacious parties. As a matter of form, Mr. Davitt, having decided to conduct his own case, was ordered to file an affidavit as to any Land League documents now or heretofore in his possession.

By the time these matters had been disposed of it was half-past twelve o'clock. The Attorney-General then rose to continue his opening statement of the Times case. Almost at the same moment Mr. Parnell, thin and pale, entered the court and made his way to the well. Having divested himself of a light overcoat he took a seat between Mr. Lewis and Mr. Davitt, with both of whom he occasionally conversed, and, as certain points were made by the Attorney-General, exchanged significant glances. The learned gentleman first devoted himself to the task of showing that an intimate relationship existed between Mr. Parnell and organisers of outrage such as Egan, Sheridan, and Boyton. Having in this connection read some letters of Egan's, Sir Richard went on to recall the history of the Kilmainham Treaty under which, as the result of negotiations conducted with the Government by Captain O'Shea, at that time an Irish Liberal M.P. and a personal friend of the member for Cork, Mr. Parnell was set at liberty on condition that he would use his influence in putting down outrage, and on his assurance that he "could certainly control his followers." What took place on that occasion showed, the Attorney-General declared, that Mr. Parnell knew of what had been going on in the way of outrage, and knew the men who were actively responsible for organising what had occurred. The announcement that Captain O'Shea would be called as a witness to describe the course of the Kilmainham negotiations created quite a momentary sensation, as did also the statement that Mr. Parnell had urgently represented to the then Home Secretary, Sir William Harcourt, the necessity of allowing Sheridan, against whom a warrant was out, to return to Ireland in order to prevent greater difficulties arising. If Mr. Parnell could undertake to put down outrages at that time why had he made no attempt to do so earlier? "I shall," exclaimed Sir Richard, "ask him in the box what steps he took prior to May 6, 1882, when occurred that terrible tragedy in Phœnix Park?" In reference to the manifesto issued on the day after the tragedy by Mr. Parnell, Mr. Dillon, and Mr. Davitt, condemning the murderers, and speaking of the policy of conciliation to be substituted for that of terrorism and distrust, "I will prove," said the Attorney-General, "by Captain O'Shea that Mr. Parnell objected to sign the manifesto, and that he only signed it under the necessities of the case." The learned gentleman went on to tell how, because of his relations with the extreme party in America, Mr. Parnell was really, on account of the signing of the manifesto, in personal danger, and how that "He applied for police protection, and was exceedingly anxious with regard to his safety." On May 8 he made a speech in Parliament denouncing the murderers; and it was not unnatural, having regard to his circumstances, that he should afterwards write, in reply to remonstrances as to the course he had taken, letters such as those which had been attributed to him. The original letter of May 15, 1882, was now for the first time produced in court. It appeared to have been folded and handled until it had lost its original colour and acquired a variety of dirty tints, whilst the folds were very worn and thumb-marked. The judges having inspected it with much care, it was handed back to the Times solicitor, who passed it on to the Attorney-General, who seemed too familiar with the document to care to bestow more than a casual glance at it as he handed it to Sir Charles Russell, who scrutinised it long and carefully, and in every variety of position. When he had finished with it he gave it to Mr. Lewis, who pointed out to him some features in it to which he apparently attached importance. Mr. Parnell also called Mr. Lewis's attention to certain matters connected with the document, which Mr. Lewis immediately afterwards showed to Mr. Campbell, M.P., who is alleged to have written the body of it over Mr. Parnell's signature. At the instance of Sir C. Russell, the Commissioners gave orders that the letter should be photographed. After this episode the Attorney-General dealt with the origination of United Ireland in 1881 by Mr. Parnell, Mr. Egan, and Mr. William O'Brien. That paper led to the establishment of the Land League, and contained articles and other matter of a kind calculated to incite to outrage and intimidation. After luncheon Sir Richard Webster reverted to the management of the Land League funds, and the alleged payments made therefrom for the promotion of outrages. He commented on the large proportion—about £100,000—of the total receipts of the Land League which had never been accounted for, and asked whether Mr. Parnell could or could not say what had been done with it. If he could not, and if no account had been kept of its expenditure, what must be the inference? Documents would be produced to show that money was transferred by Mr. Biggar whilst treasurer of the League, to men who brought about outrages. "Of course," he said, "I have no right to say that Mr. Biggar, or Mr. Parnell himself, paid individually the men who were going to do the outrages." At this admission Mr. Biggar, looking up from his seat, chuckled audibly. The connection of Frank Byrne with the League, and his flight to America when the Phœnix Park murder trials came on, were touched upon, and it was contended that the £100 given him to make good his escape was paid by Mr. Parnell himself. In this connection the Attorney-General expressed a hope that they would some day have the opportunity of seeing Mr. Parnell's pass-book—a suggestion which brought a smile to the pale face of the League's president. The American portion of the indictment was next entered upon, and Mr. Parnell watched the Attorney-General with the closest attention as he set forth what was known as to the relationship existing between Patrick Ford, of the Irish World, and the leaders of the League, who continued to receive money from that source long after they knew of the assassination doctrines preached by the paper in question. At ten minutes to four o'clock the Attorney-General suspended his speech and the Court adjourned.

On the Commissioners taking their seats at half-past ten,

Sir C. Russell read an affidavit made by Mr. George Lewis, the solicitor for Mr. Parnell, and others, stating that certain letters which were alleged to be forgeries, and which were purported to have been signed by Mr. Parnell and others, were in the possession of the other side, who objected to produce them on the ground that they were obtained for the purpose of enabling their solicitors to advise counsel and prepare briefs in the action of "O'Donnell v. Walter." This (the learned counsel went on to say) is no answer at all. It would be no answer in an ordinary action. The other side refer to a bundle of documents in a box, but do not specify them, or even state the number of such documents. The affidavit of Mr. Soames, the Times' solicitor, admits the possession of this bundle of documents in the box; but does not state what they are. Whatever your ordinary powers, your lordships certainly have power to order the discovery of any document whatever.

Mr. Reid: The Attorney-General, in the course of his speech, has referred to a letter written in August, 1881, signed "J. F.," and he says these are the initials of John Ferguson, of Glasgow. That document is not set forth in the affidavit, and I submit that it is one of the most relevant documents that can well be conceived, having regard to the nature of the opening. Again, the Attorney-General has referred to a variety of speeches which he relies on as affording evidence of some complicity with crime on the part of the persons incriminated. He says there are other speeches; but none of those speeches have been set forth in the affidavit of documents, nor is any reference made to them, except that mention is made of the contents of a box and a bundle of documents. I respectfully submit that, in addition to those documents, the existence of which is admitted in the affidavits, there have been opened by the Attorney-General, not only as material, but crucial, documents on a variety of matters which find no place whatever in the affidavits before you.

The Attorney-General: Undoubtedly your lordships have full power, and if there is any document which you think ought to be seen by either of the parties, I shall not have a word to say. But the affidavit of Mr. George Lewis is remarkable. He says: "I am informed and believe that, in addition to letters purporting to be written, there are other letters in their possession alleged to have been written and signed by Mr. Dillon, Mr. Parnell, and Mr. Biggar." He does not say that these documents are material. All that is stated is that my clients are believed to have in their possession certain documents which are said not to be genuine. The affidavit of Mr. Soames shows that some person was attempting to play a trick upon either the Times or their representatives, and somehow or other the information of that trick has been communicated to Mr. George Lewis. In all probability, in the course of this case we shall learn by whom that communication was made, and possibly from whom the original documents emanated. I think I made it clear yesterday that when the substance of the real charges and allegations originally made in "Parnellism and Crime" are examined Mr. Parnell's letters will be found to be by no means the most important issue. But be that as it may, how can it be suggested that the existence of documents, genuine or otherwise, alleged to be signed by Mr. Dillon, Mr. Biggar, and other members of Parliament, not said to be from the same source, can be material? It is simply for the purpose of suggesting that the Times is in possession of some documents not genuine that this application is made. How could the possession of documents which Mr. Soames has discovered not to be genuine have any bearing on the investigation as to whether other documents are genuine? How could the documents which the agent of Mr. Soames in America discovered not to be genuine be material? Until we have the means of knowing from whom Mr. George Lewis obtained information of these documents, they ought not to be seen. My learned friend, Mr. Reid, says he is entitled to see the document initialled "J. F." The point of my observation with regard to that document was the fact that that initial would be proved as an act done, and it had no reference to the whole of this class of documents. I submit that this class of document always has been privileged, and ought not to be allowed to be seen by the other side. If my learned friends desire to make a separate application with regard to the Land League papers and what I opened yesterday, I desire that that should be formally made and the grounds stated. I said nothing, however, about the books of the Land League in my possession, and, so far as I know, I have nothing that could be described as a book of the Land League in my possession. On the contrary, I regret that there is such a total absence of anything like the books of the Land League.

Sir C. Russell: On a preliminary occasion when I called attention to this matter I said, "Here is a case in which one side produces letters alleged to be genuine, and these letters on the other side are denounced as forgeries. The statement is made that these have been brought to the Times, and that its representatives may have been imposed upon. Surely it is of the greatest consequence that we should know whether these documents which have been produced are a selection from a larger number which have been imposed upon them." Mr. Soames, in his affidavit, admits that the person who was acting in America as the agent for the Times in the collection of these documents has been supplied with documents which were obviously not genuine, and which he admits were not so. Surely it is material that the Court should have every one of these documents before it? Again, does Mr. Soames suggest that he does not think they are material? If he thought that they were not material he would have made no reference to them at all in the affidavits.

The Attorney-General: They have never been referred to directly or indirectly in any affidavit of Mr. Soames until this one made this morning.

Sir C. Russell: Let me suggest to your lordships that if you have any doubt about this matter you should yourselves see, not merely this bundle of documents, but these letters; that your lordships should yourselves examine them fully and thoroughly, and unless there be reasons which operate upon your lordships' minds as grave reasons why we should not have them, I submit we are entitled to every one of them for inspection and to copies of every one of them.

The Attorney-General assenting to this course,

The President said: I can only say, speaking for myself, that I am obliged to counsel for having made the suggestion, because I think it will lead to the best settlement of the discussion which has arisen. Although, no doubt, it is a very onerous duty to be imposed upon us, yet we accept it, and we will ourselves first of all examine the documents for which privilege has been claimed, and which are now enclosed in the box. Then there arises the question of certain other documents which it is admitted are not in the box. Your consent extends to them also, I suppose?

Sir C. Russell: Certainly.

The President: Well, then, we will look at them, and after having looked at them we will inform you of the result of our investigation. Box A has been put into the hands of the secretary of the Commission. The other documents can be put into another box marked B. (Laughter.)

Sir C. Russell: We have a further application to make, as to the form of the particulars in relation to certain matters. An order was made by you which called upon the defendants to give the best particulars they could of the charges and allegations which they proposed to support by evidence before the Commission, specifying, as far as they were able, the names of the persons against whom these charges and allegations were made, the charges and allegations themselves, and the dates of the offences charged against each of such persons. The particulars which have been delivered are: First, the general allegation that all persons scheduled in the affidavits were engaged in a combination or organisation or conspiracy, and I gather from the Attorney-General's opening that he proposes to ask you to attribute to the persons thus directly incriminated all that anyone has done in connection with the alleged combination, organisation, or conspiracy. This is a case which will be contested by me when the proper time arrives. In addition to this, I find only two charges against particular individuals—first, the charge of making certain speeches, and then the charge against Mr. Parnell of having written the letters, copies of which are set out in the particulars. Now, we do not complain of anything in the particulars; but I submit that I am justified in saying there is nothing in these particulars that will tell any one of the sixty-five persons whose names are set out in the schedule what the particular charges are against him. Therefore I want to know whether the Attorney-General alleges that any of these sixty-five persons himself incited to outrage, or was a party directly to outrage, or to the application of funds to outrage. If that be the case, we shall know where we are. We require, therefore, particulars on the points I have indicated, showing what the charges are as directed against particular persons, if direct action is imputed to those persons.

Mr. Reid: I wish to refer your lordships to paragraph 14 of the particulars of charges: "When on certain occasions they considered it politic to denounce, and did denounce, certain crimes in public, they afterwards made communications to their associates and others with the intention of leading them to believe that such denunciation was not sincere." All I have to ask is that those, apart from Mr. Parnell, against whom such charges are directed should have information to enable them to meet the charges.

Mr. Michael Davitt: My lords, I have an application to make, and that is that I be allowed to appear here at this inquiry to ask you to investigate the serious charges that were made against me by the Attorney-General in the trial of "O'Donnell v. Walter." These charges are contained in this quotation from the Attorney-General's speech.

The Attorney-General: So far as I am concerned I have not the slightest wish that Mr. Davitt should not appear.

The President: You are plainly entitled to appear. I had nothing to do with the filing of the names of those who appear before us, but you are quite entitled. You may take it at once that you have a locus standi.

Mr. Davitt: My application is to be furnished with particulars of the charges made against me here. Very serious charges were made against me before the Lord Chief Justice. Will your lordships permit me to read the statements?

The President: You need not do that for the purpose of the present application. You will be put in the same position as other persons.

Mr. Biggar: I formally give notice of a similar application with regard to particulars in reference to myself. Of course, Sir Charles Russell has made the application in a very much more able manner than I can hope to do. But as the proceedings here are not likely to be of a very lively nature, I should like for my own convenience to know from the representatives of the Times what they really charge me with. Amongst other things, I am charged among other people with influencing newspapers, a good many of which I have never read. I am also charged with having been mixed up with a number of persons, as to a good many of whom I never heard their names, and the great majority of whom I do not personally know. With reference to this, and the other charges, I think it is only fair that I should be furnished with particulars, so that I may have an opportunity of considering my own personal defence.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Biggar has put his point very clearly, but he has probably forgotten that in the first instance he was represented by Sir Charles Russell, and that the order for particulars made on my learned friend's application applied to him as well as to the others.

The President: I understand Mr. Biggar has withdrawn.

The Attorney-General: Yes.

Sir C. Russell: I stated at the time that I appeared for certain persons only for the purposes of the then application.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Biggar has already been dealt with in the particulars which have been given. With regard to the substance of this application, I read on Monday a great many pages of "Parnellism and Crime," and pointed out that the charges as summarised were the charges and allegations therein made, but that this in no way fettered your lordships' judgment hereafter. Your lordships were good enough to say that as far as I had gone, I had sufficiently made out that the particulars represented the charges in "Parnellism and Crime."

The President: What I intended to convey was this, that you justified what I understand to be your contention that the particulars represented the charges and allegations made in the action. I did not intend to deal either with their sufficiency or with the question as to whether there were any other charges and particulars which were not included.

The Attorney-General: That really expresses what I was about to state. The question then is—What are the charges on which we propose to give evidence? Those are the charges included in the particulars—conspiracy, of being parties to conspiracy with wicked objects, and, after these objects had been partly carried out, continuing to be members of the conspiracy. To suggest that I am to give particulars of each overt act which I may be able to prove in the course of this inquiry would simply mean that I should give to your lordships the particulars of each specific thing to which each witness is to speak. Nay, more, the statement we have made is this, with regard to the Land League, which is one of the principal conspiracies, no books of any sort or kind have been produced. An order for discovery was made, and I ask your lordships kindly to note what the terms of the order were. They were that Mr. Parnell and others should state what documents had been or were in their possession or power. Mr. Parnell was undoubtedly President of the Land League, but he says he never had any documents at all, except one letter addressed to him by Mr. Frank Byrne.

The President: That is a sort of tu quoque.

The Attorney-General: No, my lord. They now ask for particulars of every overt act. My case depends not on overt acts only; it depends on the fact of these persons attending at meetings at which certain things were determined, and done in consequence of being so determined. To say I must give particulars of those charges would simply mean that I must give that which cannot be in my possession at the present time, or within my knowledge. All I know is that certain members of the Land League—their names being given—attended certain meetings and made speeches. The inference—correct or not, that is another part of the case—is that in consequence of the conduct of those members certain acts followed. Our case is that all the members whose names are given are legally responsible for what took place in consequence of the acts of conspiracy. Every place and date of meeting as to which we propose to give evidence is specified.

The President: That, of course, is an act done in furtherance of that which you allege to be an illegal conspiracy. You have given those particulars?

The Attorney-General: Yes.

The President: Well, I imagine the nature of the application is this, that if you have anything else that you can specify, then you are requested to give it.

The Attorney-General: I submit that that is a kind of thing I ought not to be allowed to do, for the reason that it would be simply stating the evidence I am going to give in support of the charge of conspiracy. Where we were in a position to give particulars we have given them. We have fulfilled the onus cast upon us. Sir Charles Russell says he wishes to know whether persons are to be charged with inciting to any particular crime, or conniving at such crime. The charge and allegation is that you incited to, connived at, and approved of, not one, but hundreds of crimes. I have shown that there was a system practised continually during 1881 and 1882 whereby the decrees of the Land League were enforced by the commission of crimes, and the persons charged connived at every one of these crimes. Mind, this application comes in the middle of my opening. They could not get up before and say there were not sufficient particulars.

Sir C. Russell: I made my application at the first sitting of the Court.

The Attorney-General: Excuse me, you did nothing of the kind. It was postponed at your request. But my charge is not that you, Mr. Parnell, knew that poor Rafferty was going to be carded, or that another person was to be murdered, but that you and your friends, through your Land League, were parties to that system, approved of it, and allowed it to be carried out, and that when that system was shown to have these effects you went on doing it. Unless I am to prove my case on paper, and to write down a summary of the evidence which each witness is going to give, I submit that I am not called upon to do anything more than I have done. The duty of inquiring rests with your lordships, and not with the Times. If I had gone out of this Court the Commission could not have refused to do anything further in the matter. I do desire, however, to put before your lordships all the facts I can. But information comes to us from day to day with regard to matters of detail, and things which I could not put in any particulars the day before yesterday, I might now. If my learned friend says, "You make charges in 'Parnellism and Crime' that you have not now included in the particulars," it does not follow that no evidence will ultimately be given upon them. All I am now doing is to lay the outline of the evidence I propose to tender in support of the very particular and specific allegations I have made.

Sir C. Russell: Either my learned friend's client is instructed that there are definite charges to be made against individuals, or he is not. If he has evidence in support of specific allegations, then the very commonest justice requires that we should be told by the advocate of truth and justice what those particulars are. I will give an illustration. My learned friend referred yesterday to the unhappy murder of Mr. Herbert, and in his opening he sought to connect that murder, which took place on March 30, 1882, with a speech made at Knocknabull in the month of June, 1881, or nearly a year before.

The President: Is that speech among the speeches referred to in the schedule.

Sir C. Russell: No, my lord, and that is my point. It is not alleged that any member of Parliament was present at that meeting. My learned friend has intimated that he is in a position to make definite charges of a specific character—not mere membership of this organisation, and we want to know why we are not to know what these charges are. Of course, I am only referring to matters which are now in their knowledge, and not to matters which may hereafter be brought to it; but why with reference to what they now know, are they not to give particulars of the specific charges they propose to bring, in order that the persons incriminated may know how to meet them. My learned friend has stated that in my opinion the only serious charge against Mr. Parnell is the letters. I never said that. I have stated that it was one of the most important, if not the most important. At all events, it is the only charge which has an air of novelty about it. So far as the other charges, they are a mere rechauffé of what was published and discussed years ago. But that does not relieve this Court, I would respectfully suggest, from the duty, and my learned friend from the obligation, to give a plain statement where there is a definite charge against any one of these sixty-five persons of incitement to a participation in crime.

The President (after consulting his fellow-Commissioners): The particulars which have been given may be said generally to disclose a charge of conspiracy to bring about certain ends by illegal means, and that must be dealt with in the way that charges of conspiracy usually are. It is not necessary that all the details of the overt acts should be stated in the particulars. The object of particulars is to inform the persons who are accused of the nature of the charge brought against them, in order that they may be prepared to meet it. We are of opinion that these particulars do fulfil what is required by law, and what is the practice in that respect. Undoubtedly, if there be any particular instances having regard to individuals of which information could be given other than a general connection with these organisations which have been referred to, then I must say I think it would be desirable that information on those points should be given, in order that the witnesses may be cross-examined. But it is impossible to search the consciences of those who are conducting a case of this kind, and we have no reason to suppose that these particulars have not been drawn with the desire to give as much information as it is in the power of the Attorney-General's clients to give at this stage. The Attorney-General has opened his case with great particularity, and he has indicated the nature of the evidence which he proposes to lay before us. There has, therefore, been an opportunity of seeing many matters which may be met by countervailing evidence and cross-examination of the witnesses called in support of these statements. If we see that there are any points on which it would be right that there should be delay in order that Sir C. Russell's clients may inform themselves further than they are informed, we have an opportunity of allowing that delay; but we are of opinion that there is no reason at this stage of the proceedings to require the defendants in the action of "O'Donnell v. Walter" to give further particulars than those which they have already afforded.

The Attorney-General: The Hibernian Bank has disobeyed an order for the production of the bank books. The better course would probably be that we should communicate to them formally that we have mentioned the matter to your lordships, and if they do not intend to comply, give them notice to attend on Monday or Tuesday.

The President: If the bank ultimately refuse you we shall be obliged to have recourse to our powers. Of course we shall not do that without giving them the opportunity of being heard.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Davitt having appeared, I must ask him for an affidavit of documents.

Mr. Davitt bowed assent.

The Attorney-General, resuming his opening address, said: Your lordships will recollect that I had arrived when the Court adjourned last night at the discussion of certain incidents prior to the month of May, 1882. There are two other letters which passed early in 1882 which are of importance, apart from the ordinary question of handwriting. They are believed to be in the handwriting of Mr. Egan. One is under date March 8, 1882:

"Dear Sir—Your presence in the West is urgently asked for. The thing must be done promptly. Send reply to address already given you.—Yours truly,
"PATRICK EGAN."

The President: I suppose you do not state to whom the latter was sent?

The Attorney-General: I am not able, at the present time, to state to whom it was addressed. The other letter is dated March 11, 1882:

"Dear Sir—As I understand your letter which reached me to-day, you cannot act as directed unless I forward you money to manage things. Well, here is £50; more if required. Under existing circumstances what you suggest cannot be entertained."

Now I come to a part of the case which requires careful treatment from me, and which will, in our view, form a very important feature or incident in connection with the matter. I have many times suggested to your lordships that I should submit that there could be no doubt of any kind that Mr. Parnell was personally acquainted with what was the outcome of the action of the Land League, of which he was the president, and that ultimately he would not be allowed to say that he was not responsible for what the Land League had done. Now I approach an incident of the case which, if the evidence be in accordance with my instructions, will prove conclusively that Mr. Parnell did know what had been done by Sheridan, by Egan, and by Boyton. If what passed between Mr. Parnell and the witness I shall call be true, undoubtedly he knew that Sheridan had been actively engaged in the promotion of outrage in the West, and Boyton in Leinster, and that Egan had been supplying the funds with which outrages had been promoted, not only in those places, but elsewhere. In the early part of 1882 negotiations were carried on between Captain O'Shea and Mr. Parnell. Mr. Parnell was in Kilmainham, together with a number of other suspects; and a large amount of freedom with regard to communication with the outside world was allowed them. The prisoners associated together, and had certain privileges which persons in confinement do not ordinarily have, as they were not convicted prisoners. In the early part of April Mr. Parnell was released on parole and went to Paris. On that occasion, in going or coming from Paris, he saw Captain O'Shea. Subsequently Mr. O'Shea went to Kilmainham to have a special interview with Mr. Parnell, who had returned towards the end of April, Captain O'Shea's visit being on the 27th or 28th of that month. On May 7, which was the day after the Phœnix Park murders, there were further interviews between Captain O'Shea and Mr. Parnell. The general outline of the discussion was with reference to a certain course which might be taken by Mr. Parnell with regard to the land question in Ireland. While Mr. Parnell did not wish that the question of his personal release should be at all prominently brought forward, the fact of his personal release and that of others was made the basis of the negotiation. The question arose as to whether or not Mr. Parnell would be able to control those who were with him in Kilmainham at the time, and those who were not with him, but with whom he was connected. The question directly arose as to whether if a particular line of policy, which would cause the land question to assume a different aspect, were accepted by Mr. Parnell, it would also be accepted by those with whom he was associated, and, in particular, by those on the other side of the water, in America. The main anxiety on the part of those negotiating with Mr. Parnell was the putting an end to that horrible system of outrages that had been carried on, and the question arose between Captain O'Shea and Mr. Parnell as to whether Mr. Parnell would or could assist in putting down outrage. I ask your lordships to bear in mind that from the year 1880 up to the time of his imprisonment—a period of twenty months—Mr. Parnell had not moved hand or foot to stop the outrages; that neither in writing nor in speech had he said one single thing or done one single act tending in that direction. It will appear from what is in writing that the offer of Mr. Parnell, in the event of an arrangement being made of which he could approve, was that he would assist to his utmost in putting down outrage. The question arose whether he could control his comrades, and thereupon Mr. Parnell said that certain of his comrades must not be released, at any rate at present, and that, among others, Thomas Brennan, who had been the secretary of the Land League, must either be kept out of Ireland or kept in prison. I shall ask your lordships to draw a conclusion, if this be true, as to what was the knowledge of Mr. Parnell of what Brennan had been connected with prior to his being imprisoned in Kilmainham. A question then arose as to Michael Davitt. He was in Portland, and there had been no communication between him and Mr. Parnell. It was believed that Mr. Davitt would be strongly opposed to the withdrawal of the "No-rent" manifesto. He had been no party to it, but it was thought there might be difficulty in getting his assent to its withdrawal, or to some other part of Mr. Parnell's policy. Mr. Parnell said that he considered it essential that Mr. Davitt should be let out, but he asked that his release should be postponed until he and Mr. Dillon had had an opportunity of seeing him. That course was adopted, because Mr. Davitt was not released from Portland until May 6, the day of the Phœnix Park murders. The question then arose as to how they were to stop these outrages. The burning question then—the question which was recognised by the Government of the day as of the greatest importance, so far as the statement I am putting before your lordships is concerned—was how to put an end to this horrible system of outrages. The question was whether Mr. Parnell was in a position to do it; and Mr. Parnell stated that he had every confidence—a confidence shared by those who were acting with him—that the exertions they would be able to make would be sufficient to enable them to stop these outrages. If it be true that Mr. Parnell had no knowledge of these outrages, what was the good of any such suggestion or any such course being proposed? But the matter does not stop there. The question having arisen as to who would be the best persons for putting an end to the outrages, Mr. Parnell said Sheridan must be allowed to come back. Sheridan at that time had some proceeding or warrant issued against him. Mr. Parnell also said Boyton must be allowed to be at large, and he also referred to Egan. The question was most anxiously considered between Mr. Parnell and Captain O'Shea, and Mr. Parnell was satisfied that he would be able to control those persons, who were so mixed up in outrages. He stated that if he got the first run of Egan, Sheridan, and Boyton he had no doubt he would be able to control them—in other words, his influence over them was such that he would be able to induce them to abandon the policy they had been pursuing and adopt the views Mr. Parnell was favouring at the time. If the documents which will be produced are genuine—and I do not at present understand how it can be alleged that they are otherwise than genuine—if the account given by Captain O'Shea is correct, I think there will not be the slightest doubt in your lordships' minds that Mr. Parnell was thoroughly acquainted with the circumstances under which Sheridan, Egan, and Boyton had been working. In accordance with the arrangement Mr. Parnell was released, with Mr. Dillon and others. What passed at their interview with Mr. Davitt in Portland Prison I cannot, of course, say; but, so far as we can judge, he was very much opposed to the policy Mr. Parnell had at that time initiated—opposed to any step in the direction of conciliation between the English Government and the Irish party—because Mr. Davitt never made any secret of his principles, which from beginning to end have been absolutely opposed to any recognition of landlords, English Government, or English connection with Ireland. (Laughter.) A difficulty arose with regard to the withdrawal of any prohibition as to the presence of Sheridan. A warrant was out against him, and at the request of Mr. Parnell Captain O'Shea went to Sir William Harcourt with reference to it. I am not in a position to state what passed between Captain O'Shea and Sir William Harcourt, but I am in a position to say that Captain O'Shea came back to Mr. Parnell and stated the difficulties, whereupon Mr. Parnell told him that if Sheridan was not allowed to come back great difficulties indeed would arise. Practically speaking, I have now put before you the outline of what I am prepared to prove with reference to Mr. Parnell's part in connection with what has been called the Kilmainham Treaty. The importance of it is that it shows the knowledge which Mr. Parnell had as to what had been the work of the organisation before, and, further, it shows the promise of Mr. Parnell to do his utmost to put down outrages. I cannot help repeating the question why he had not done his utmost to put down outrage before? I shall ask him, in the box, what steps he took to put down outrage prior to May 6, 1882. On that day occurred that terrible tragedy in Phœnix Park. It is no part of my case to suggest, nor do I propose to give any evidence, that prior to the Phœnix Park murders Mr. Parnell had any knowledge of any such murder being contemplated. It will be part of my case to show that the necessities of Mr. Parnell's position at that time undoubtedly placed him in a difficulty, and rendered it necessary that he should write some such letter or make some such statement as that which was written respecting the murders. On May 7, the day after the horrible tragedy occurred, Captain O'Shea saw Mr. Parnell, and on that day the following manifesto was sent out:

"To the People of Ireland—On the eve of what seemed a bright future for our country, that evil destiny which has apparently pursued us for centuries has struck another blow at our hopes, which cannot be exaggerated in its disastrous consequences. In this hour of sorrowful gloom we venture to give an expression of our profoundest sympathy with the people of Ireland in the calamity that has befallen our cause, through a horrible deed, and to those who had determined at the last hour that a policy of conciliation should supplant that of terrorism and national distrust. We earnestly hope that the attitude and action of the whole Irish people will show the world that assassination such as has startled us almost to the abandonment of hope for our country's future is deeply and religiously abhorrent to their every feeling and instinct. We appeal to you to show by every manner of expression that almost universal feeling of horror which this assassination has excited. No people feels so intense a detestation of its atrocity, or so deep a sympathy for those whose hearts must be seared by it, as the nation upon whose prospects and reviving hopes it may entail consequences more ruinous than have fallen to the lot of unhappy Ireland during the present generation. We feel that no act has ever been perpetrated in our country during the exciting struggles for social and political rights of the past fifty years that has so stained the name of hospitable Ireland as this cowardly and unprovoked assassination of a friendly stranger, and that until the murderers of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke are brought to justice that stain will sully our country's name.

(Signed) CHARLES S. PARNELL.
JOHN DILLON.
MICHAEL DAVITT."

The "policy of conciliation" referred to undoubtedly related to the arrangement which Mr. Parnell had hoped to carry out by means of the negotiations that were going on. I will prove before your lordships by Captain O'Shea that Mr. Parnell objected to sign the manifesto, and that he only signed it under the necessities of the case, and objected to its terms. It had been drawn, I am instructed, by Mr. Davitt. The document undoubtedly put Mr. Parnell in very great peril. It will appear, in the course of this case, that the relations between Mr. Parnell and the extreme party in America was very intimate. It will appear that from 1879-80 down to 1882 the ultimate separation of Ireland from England was the only means of a common working between the extreme section and the moderate section. As I trust I shall be able to prove, it was that arrangement only that secured for the Irish Land League the support of American money. Therefore Mr. Parnell could not be a party to any such utterance as that contained in the manifesto, nor could he make the statement which he afterwards did make in Parliament, without subjecting himself to very great danger. There is not the slightest doubt, as will be proved by Captain O'Shea, that Mr. Parnell was in personal danger, that he applied for police protection—(Mr. Parnell dissented)—and that he was exceedingly anxious with regard to his personal safety. Subsequently to this manifesto being issued, some questions arose as to whether or not attempts should be made to find out who the murderers were. Thereupon Egan, the treasurer of the Land League, threatened to resign if any of the Land League funds were voted for a reward for the purpose of finding out the murderers of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke. That fact will be placed beyond all doubt by a telegram sent by Egan himself. If that be true, it will show how great was the strain brought to bear on Mr. Parnell and his position by the course of events. It will appear that the persons who dealt with these Phœnix Park murders in America by no means always treated them as murders. They were regarded as one of the victories by the extreme section of the Irish party, and with the men who regarded them as a victory the representatives of Mr. Parnell had been in close connection. No man is, of course, responsible for all the views held by every person with whom he comes into contact; but at the same time, if it is correct that these views were held by Egan and the party with whom he associated, it shows the strong necessity of the position taken up by Mr. Egan when he said that the Land League funds were not to be used for this purpose. On May 8 Mr. Parnell made a speech in Parliament denouncing the murderers, and there is no doubt that, if the letter of May 15 was signed by Mr. Parnell, it was written in reply to remonstrances as to the course he had taken, coming from members of the extreme party. I will pass on to consider the difficulties of his position, and the necessity for some such conduct as is indicated by the letter to which I have referred. The case I have to present is that the extreme party did not regard the Phœnix Park murders as either a wickedness or as an act of which they ought to express disapproval. It was an act of which there had been positive celebrations of the anniversary at subsequent dates in America. It also led to a Martyrs' Fund, which was a fund for giving money to the relatives of the men who had died on the scaffold. None of the witnesses received any part of that fund, nor the men who pleaded guilty. It is impossible to exaggerate the difficulties in which Mr. Parnell was placed. For two and a half years he and his organisation had been receiving tens of thousands of pounds from America, with the distinct and clear understanding that the object with which the joint organisation was working was to be the total separation of England and Ireland, carried out by any means useful for the common object. Here, then, was a distinct repudiation by Mr. Parnell of the extreme section of the Irish party. Mr. Parnell may have deeply regretted the connection that existed; but there it was, and how was he to deal with the difficulties in which he was placed? It has been stated that on May 15 Mr. Parnell wrote the following letter:

"Dear Sir—I am not surprised at your friend's anger, but he and you should know that to denounce the murders was the only course open to us. To do that promptly was plainly our best policy. But you can tell him, and all others concerned, that though I regret the accident of Lord F. Cavendish's death, I cannot refuse to admit that Burke got no more than his deserts. You are at liberty to show him this and others whom you can trust also, but let not my address be known. He can write to House of Commons.—Yours very truly, "CHAS. S. PARNELL."

The President: Have you had photographs taken of these letters?

The Attorney-General: The original letters were inspected by Mr. Parnell and Mr. Campbell, and possibly by others; but I do not know that photographs were taken.

Sir C. Russell: We have several times requested that photographs should be taken. We do not consider the facsimile copies sufficient.

Sir J. Hannen: I said that if these were not considered sufficient photographs might be taken. Let me see the original, and then I shall be able to form an opinion.

Sir C. Russell desired to see them in order to form an opinion.

The Attorney-General: You will not be allowed to form an opinion.

Sir C. Russell: I may form an opinion in my own mind, I suppose.

The original letter was then handed in and was examined by the Commissioners, and subsequently by Sir C. Russell, Mr. Parnell, and Mr. George Lewis.

The Attorney-General: Your lordships will note that our allegation is that the handwriting in the body of that letter is that of Mr. Campbell, who undoubtedly wrote many letters for Mr. Parnell, and there are many specimens of his handwriting. Your lordships will not expect me now to deal with the peculiarities of handwriting; but I think it right to call your attention to one or two matters in connection with the statements of Mr. Parnell about that letter. The first statement made by Mr. Parnell was that the signature was nothing like his, and that he never had used any such signature at all. A number of other minute criticisms have been advanced on parts of the letter, particular strokes in this place, a particular termination in another place, and here there is a circumstance to which I would draw your lordships' special attention. The letter appeared on April 18, and on the same day Mr. Parnell absolutely denied ever having written anything like it at all; but the next day the Times replied, calling attention to the fact that they undoubtedly possessed contemporaneous signatures of Mr. Parnell in which the particular features of this handwriting were to be found. There is one matter even more important than that. It will be proved that in the year 1888, after the production of the letter in "O'Donnell against Walter," Mr. Parnell again made a statement, having seen a facsimile of the letter, that it was a signature which he had used up to 1879, and which he had then definitely abandoned. I shall produce genuine signatures of Mr. Parnell subsequently to 1879, in which the characteristics of this signature are present. I can understand the almost paramount necessity for Mr. Parnell to write some such letter, having regard to the position in which he was placed. He no doubt never intended it for the public gaze. It will indeed have already appeared that a large section of people regarded the removal of any Irish official as an act of warfare, and that any Englishman brought over to the Irish Office might be removed by these means. It was not in consequence of anything which was not in existence before that Mr. Parnell was obliged to adopt this attitude. There are two other letters. I do not know whether your lordships would require to see the originals now?

Sir J. Hannen: No. We only wished to see the others in order to decide whether we could do without a photograph.

Sir C. Russell: What is your lordships' decision on that point?

Sir J. Hannen: Undoubtedly you may have it. I gave directions before that you might have it if you pleased.

The Attorney-General: There are two other letters written, which are alleged to be forgeries, and your lordships will find them in the proceedings of "O'Donnell against Walter." The first is:

June 16, 1882.

"Dear Sir—I am sure you will feel that I could not appear in Parliament in the face of this thing unless I condemned it. Our position there is always difficult to maintain; it would be untenable but for the course we took. That is the truth. I can say no more.—Yours very truly, "CHAS. S. PARNELL."

The other letter was as follows:

"Dear Sir—I shall always be anxious to have the goodwill of your friends, but why do they impugn my motives? I could not consent to the conditions they would impose, but I accept the entire responsibility for what we have done.—Yours very truly, "CHAS. S. PARNELL."

Sir J. Hannen: Are the bodies of these letters in Mr. Parnell's handwriting?

The Attorney-General: They are in the handwriting of Campbell, according to our allegation. Nobody will suggest that those letters are unreasonable or unnatural. A remonstrance by an extreme section would be met by some such reply. I will ask your lordships to look at these signatures. All my comment upon them at present will be this, that if they are forgeries it is about the clumsiest thing that ever was done, and the forger must have been about as foolish a man as can be contemplated. Your lordships will probably have some information given to you in regard to the condition of health of Mr. Parnell at that time, and to the characteristics of the writing in view of a possible condition of health and in view of other writings of Mr. Parnell. I shall submit to your lordships that it by no means detracts from the probability of those being genuine that there are in connection with these signatures certain characteristics which are different from the previous signatures, when your lordships have heard the evidence that will be given in regard to the presence in these signatures of certain other characteristics. If those letters had been the work of a skilful forger there are many things that would have been found in them which are absent, and certainly there are some things there which never would have been put in had it simply been the desire to make an imitation. As far as we can say, the whole history of these letters will be placed before your lordships, and the names of persons from whom they were obtained, so far as it is possible for my clients to do so, will be put at once before the Commission.

Sir J. Hannen: What is the meaning of that limitation?

The Attorney-General: At the time these letters were obtained certain pledges were given in regard to non-disclosure by the persons to whom the letters were given, for good reasons or for bad; that may be a matter that your lordships will have to consider. Personal danger was at that time seriously apprehended. All fear of it is not yet removed by any means. My clients are in hopes that these pledges will be released, and that they will have a perfectly free hand with reference to the persons from whom the letters were first obtained. So far as they can they will endeavour that your lordships shall have full information with regard to the persons from whom these letters came, and the circumstances under which they were obtained. At the time when I made my statement in "O'Donnell v. Walter," none of the pledges had been released. They gave an assurance that, cost them what it might, those pledges would not be broken. Those pledges have been partly released, and before the end of the case may be still further released. So far as my clients have given any personal pledges at all they are released. If these letters are genuine, it is clear proof of knowledge, but it affects Mr. Parnell, and Mr. Parnell alone. It does not in any way relieve Mr. Parnell from the responsibility which rests upon him of clearing himself from the connection which we allege existed between him and the organisation to which I have referred. The charges may be described as reckless, but they have never been investigated before a legal tribunal. Mr. Parnell has been distinctly charged with the consequences of these acts, and he and his associates have continued to go on for months, nay, for years, in the same conduct, leading to the same fearful and awful consequences. One of the matters I now wish to refer to is the position of a paper called United Ireland. That paper was started in July, 1881, practically speaking, by the amalgamation of three papers, the Shamrock, the Irishman, and the Flag of Ireland. Mr. W. O'Brien, one of those charged, was the person who started it. During the time I refer to he edited it from Kilmainham, and it was published in Paris. This is a matter in which we say that the knowledge, complicity, and connivance of these gentlemen deserve careful consideration. On July 30, 1881, Mr. W. O'Brien published a letter of his own and one from Mr. Parnell. The letter was dated from the House of Commons, and in it Mr. Parnell said, "I have become aware that a company has been formed for the purpose among other objects of starting a penny weekly national newspaper, which will aim at representing in a thorough manner the spirit of agrarian, industrial, and national self-reliance. The paper will be called United Ireland. Its management is undertaken by Mr. William O'Brien. I have no hesitation in saying that the publication of United Ireland is an important gain to the cause." The letter of Mr. William O'Brien was merely asking for assistance from the branches of the Land League in the formation of the agencies of the new paper, and my object is simply to show that Mr. W. O'Brien, one of the persons charged, was connected with this paper and that it was the organ of the Land League. That paper was owned largely by Mr. Parnell. Nearly all the capital was held by Egan, Mr. Parnell, and a small share by Mr. W. O'Brien. I think it will appear that they also owned it as trustees, and that it was Land League money which was running United Ireland.

The Court here adjourned for luncheon.

The Attorney-General resuming, after the adjournment, said: I have spoken of the position of United Ireland in connection with the Irish party. I will now summarise what I shall be able to prove from the columns of that newspaper. In the first place, the action that was going on under the Land League was called "The Campaign." A very large proportion of space was devoted to reports of what was happening at the local League meetings, and to incidents in connection with evictions, under such headings as "Baiting a Bailiff," "Captain Moonlight," and "Land-grabber Confounded," while side by side with these appeared articles which contained no expression of disapproval of outrages, but rather tended to incitement to the commission of further offences of the same kind. United Ireland of Oct. 8, 1881, also contained a report of a speech by Mr. Parnell at Mallow. With regard to the visits to Paris, it is impossible to understand why, if Mr. Egan's business was so constitutional and aboveboard, it should be necessary for him to leave the country and go to Paris. I shall prove that the Land League Council met in Paris in February, 1881, and that there was really continuity of its meetings. I shall prove that various documents passed between Matthew Harris and members of the executive of the Land League, which will put beyond all question that he was an organiser of the Land League, and not merely a private speaker. In the matter of money, I desire to put before you the position of Mr. Matthew Harris. In the early days of the League he was not regarded as of the same importance, and only small sums were paid him. Amounts of £2 and £4 were given him. But in November, 1880, he got £20 from Mr. Brennan, and £20 from Mr. Egan about the same date. In the month of January, 1881—about the 7th—he got £10 from Mr. Egan, and £30 from Mr. Egan on Jan. 8. There were other smaller amounts of money which Mr. Harris received. It seems difficult to suggest that the speeches made by Mr. Harris, if they were likely to have the consequences to which I referred, were made without communication with the members of the League by whom he was paid and employed. In February he was undoubtedly attending council meetings with Mr. Egan and Mr. Parnell, and in March in the same year he received £15 from Mr. Brennan. I think I shall be able to show you how these outrages were carried out. Such was the feeling in Ireland, so easy was it to excite the tenantry there—the poor, half-educated, semi-savage men, as they have been described by their own party—that a little money went a long way; but still it will be shown you that considerable sums of money were paid. Well, how was it done? In this connection it is to be regretted that the books and documents of the League have been suppressed. If at any time your lordships are in a position to probe this matter, I am sure it will lead to remarkable disclosures. The emissaries of the Land League used to get money from Mr. Biggar, Egan, and others, and go down and distribute it locally to those who were to carry out the outrages. I do not allege that Mr. Biggar or Mr. Parnell gave it personally to the latter individuals. The matter of money is of no small importance. It shows the connection between the American and the Irish sections. From the Freeman's Journal, in which the receipts were acknowledged, it appears that from October, 1879, to October, 1881, a period of two years, £144,890 was received by the Land League. Of that they accounted for £44,377, leaving unaccounted for upwards of £100,000. Did Mr. Parnell have an account of these moneys? Did he have an account of the expenditure of these moneys or did he not? If he did not have an account, or if he is not able to give us information, or if no other of the officials are able to give it to us, then I suggest that it is because the purposes for which the money was used would not bear an account being kept. And I say that if the story my learned friend is instructed to make is true, it will be exceedingly important to know what was done with this large sum of money. If the agitation was a constitutional agitation, why were the books removed? Have they disappeared from London? If they have not disappeared, where are they at the present time? Your lordships will be able to examine men who must have known whether there were books, and if so where they have gone. Six of these men were ordered to make affidavits with respect to the Land League, the National League, and the Ladies' League, but in these affidavits, except in that of Dr. Kenny, M.P., there is not a solitary reference to the books of the Land League. If the money was collected and expended the purposes for which it was expended were known, and there ought to be a proper account. Up to the present I cannot understand why difficulties should be thrown in the way of a full investigation of what was spent. I shall refer your lordships to the transaction in which Timothy Horan was concerned, where he asked for money for men who were shot, whose names could not be mentioned. If there were many transactions of this kind I can understand why the papers should disappear. I do not, and I cannot believe, that any one of the eighty members of Parliament had the least idea that the document signed by Timothy Horan was in existence. There was a regular course of business between the branches and the central office. I now pass on to what happened after May, 1882. It will be convenient if I state the connection between Frank Byrne and the English Land League, the connection between him and Mr. Parnell, and the circumstances under which Frank Byrne fled from justice and was assisted in his flight, as we have alleged, by moneys received from Mr. Parnell. Before this tribunal I must assume nothing. I do not know whether it will be part of the duty of those who represent any of the persons charged to allege that Frank Byrne was not implicated in the Phœnix Park murders; but, according to a public statement which has never yet been repudiated, he undoubtedly was closely connected with them. No one can tell to what extent it may be necessary to investigate these matters. Then I have to deal with the National League, an organisation that took the place of the Land League. When the latter was suppressed, beyond doubt the executive council and personnel of its successor were the same as those of the Land League. Here I may remind your lordships that the Crimes Act was in force from 1882 to the end of 1885, approximately. During the time it was in force the outrages to which I have referred as having taken place during 1880, 1881, and the early part of 1882 diminished to an enormous extent, and that after the Crimes Act expired under the tyranny of the National League, as distinct from the Land League, and until the National League was suppressed, outrages of the same character were carried on. It was distinctly brought to the notice of Mr. Parnell that the action of the Land League had resulted in certain consequences, and in the face of that warning he and his immediate supporters pursued exactly the same line of conduct as before, with practically the same results. The Crimes Act in Parliament was naturally opposed by Mr. Parnell and his followers. During this time there was in existence an English Land League, of which Mr. Justin M'Carthy was the president, Mr. Biggar was the vice-president, Mr. Byrne the general secretary, and Mr. John Redmond and Mr. Quinn were the treasurers. Their offices were in Palace-chambers, Westminster Bridge, and it is in connection with the organisation and its offices at Westminster that some remarkable allegations were made. To these offices the Irish M.P.'s had access, although it is more than probable that a great many of them knew very little of what was going on there, so far as Byrne was concerned. We have alleged that to these offices were taken the knives with which the Phœnix Park murders were committed, or, if not those knives, knives of an identically similar character, and intended for the same purposes. We shall submit evidence to show that the knives were procured either by Frank Byrne or by his orders. On Jan. 3, 1883, a man named Farrell made a statement to Inspector Kavanagh in Ireland, and the result of the knowledge that this statement had been made was that Mr. Byrne left England and went to France. The excuse—for I will suggest that it was an excuse—was that his health was bad, and that he was ordered to Cannes. He dated his letters from Cannes, but it would appear that he never was there at all, and that the letters were written from Paris. Whether or not his health was such as to necessitate his indulging in or enjoying the warm air of Cannes, he very soon left France and took a voyage to America. The allegation is that Byrne's escape was assisted, if not that Byrne was actually enabled to escape by the cheque of £100 among other moneys received from Mr. Parnell. I come to a letter which will be put in, and which may also be alleged to be a forgery. It is as follows:

"Hotel des Pins, Cannes, France, Feb. 8, '82.

"The Executive N. L. and L. L. of Great Britain.

"Gentlemen—I regret much that since I left home I have not been able to write to you before now, as in addition to my lung complaint I have been suffering from rheumatism in my right hand and arm, which made it impossible for me to write. It is much better now, but still far from being in a state to permit me to write much. I was, as you have no doubt been informed by Mr. M'Sweeny, obliged to leave suddenly by the positive orders of the doctor, and could not, in consequence, communicate with you previous to my departure. Mr. M'Sweeny will also have informed you that I received the promised cheque £100 from Mr. Parnell on the day I left London. Immediately on my arrival in Paris I proceeded to discharge all the liabilities for which I had authority, and I now enclose balance-sheet showing income and expenditure from Dec. 30. You will see I have no account of either since Jan. 20, except so far as recording the receipt of £100 on the 23rd, and cash sent to Mr. Walsh for fortnight ending Jan. 20, and my own salary up to Saturday next. The cash sent to Mr. Walsh was not authorised by you, as his returns, which I now enclose, have not yet come before you. They are now of the usual character, and I hope you will adopt them to-morrow night. I shall to-morrow forward to Mr. Quinn cheque or draft for amount on hand, £35 17s 7½d, and Mr. M'Sweeny will no doubt supply you with account of receipts and expenditure since Jan. 20. As it is impossible for me to conduct the business of the organisation from such a distance, and as it is likely to be some weeks before I shall be fit to return, I would respectfully request you to relieve me for the present from the responsibility attached thereto, and I would also suggest that as your income at present is not large, that you would consider whether you are in a position to continue to pay a salary to an official who cannot perform his duties. While making this suggestion I would also remind you that my position is not an independent one. If not already done, I would advise the official alteration in the name, &c., of the organisation and its announcement to the branches immediately. I shall be happy to hear from you in reply, and information upon any point you may require I shall, of course, supply at the earliest moment. I am, Gentlemen, yours faithfully,

"FRANK BYRNE, Gen. Sec."

I shall submit to your lordships that this is undoubtedly a genuine document signed by Frank Byrne, and that the statements in it are true. I ask your lordships to make a note of the figures, £35 17s 7½d, because these occur in the documents to which I shall have to call attention. Your lordships will notice that it was dated Feb. 8, 1882, but that is evidently a mistake for 1883. In it Mr. Byrne said that he was going to write to Mr. Quinn. The representative of the Times received the letter of Mr. Frank Byrne which I have just read, believing it, as they now believe it, to be a genuine letter. Mr. O'Donnell, in the action "O'Donnell v. Walter," disclosed documents, and among others a letter from Frank Byrne to Quinn, dated Feb. 10, 1883, the original of which will be produced before your lordship. A comparison of the two letters will enable you to judge whether the letter I have just read is genuine from a handwriting point of view. This is the letter to Quinn:

"Hotel des Pins, Cannes, France, Feb. 10, 1883.

"My Dear Quinn—I dare say you will have heard before now that I had left London for a warmer climate, in accordance with the positive orders of the doctor. I was obliged to leave suddenly, or I should have tried to see you before my departure.

"I am glad to say that already I find a considerable improvement. The doctor thinks, however, that as soon as I am sufficiently strong I should take a long sea voyage, and he recommended America. I don't like the idea, but if my restoration of health depends upon it of course I must go.

"I enclose you a cheque for £35 17s 7d, the amount of cash in my hands belonging to the executive. At the last settling we had you held a sum of £1 6s 1d, so that you will now have £37 3s 8d in hand.

"If you can spare the time and have the inclination you might drop me a few lines here.

"I wish you would attend next executive meeting and inform them of receipt of this or else write them.—I am, dear Quinn, yours faithfully,

"FRANK BYRNE.

"P.S.—Kind regard to Mrs. Quinn and Tom."

The proprietors of the Times had not the slightest knowledge that that document existed or was still to be found, beyond the reference to it in the letter of which they had obtained possession. You will observe the remarkable coincidence that the same sum is mentioned in both letters, and that they are genuine I think you will have no doubt. I believe an explanation will be given, and I shall prove at some stage or other what this explanation is worth. It is said that Byrne did not get the £100 from Mr. Parnell, but that, having a number of cheques, &c., exactly amounting to £100, he took them to Mr. M'Carthy, who gave him in exchange an open cheque for the amount. All I can say is that it was a very extraordinary thing that there should be no reference to it in the letter. It is for your lordships to say whether this explanation is a sufficiently good one. Let us consider what else happened to the men whose names I have mentioned as prominently connected with the Land League—Egan, Sheridan, Boyton, Byrne, and Brennan; also Eugene Sheehy, and probably some others. I shall ask you to consider what it was that caused the treasurer of the Land League to escape to America. It was stated by Sir Charles Russell that I had said that a warrant was out against Egan in connection with the Phœnix Park murders. I am not aware that I ever made such a statement. I believe I said that extradition proceedings were taken in order to get him extradited from Paris to England. Whatever may have been the reason, such was the effect of the disclosures in Dublin, that Egan and Byrne went to America, as also did Boyton, Brennan, and Sheridan. I shall have to show and ultimately prove what these people have done in America and what their public conduct has been, and the part they played in connection with a meeting at which Mr. Parnell or his representatives were present. It will be proved that, after circumstances which must have aroused suspicions of Byrne's real character, resolutions were passed by some of the leading gentlemen whose names I have mentioned affirming that Byrne's conduct had been most straightforward, and that he was perfectly in a position to meet the charges brought against him. Mr. Byrne himself did not seem to have been as anxious to meet the charges as one would have supposed he would have been if he was in a position to justify the recommendations of him in the resolutions to which I have just referred. I shall be able to give your lordships distinct evidence as to the way in which the Irish World was treated by many of those whose names are enclosed in these particulars. Your lordships will find a statement as to a series of funds collected by the Irish World for certain patriotic objects. I do not know if your lordships have a copy.

The President: I have seen it.

The Attorney-General: There are one or two to which I wish to call attention. First, the Skirmishing Fund, at one time called the National Fund, which, though collected for a different object, was used to start the National League. Then there was the Rossa testimonial. Rossa, I need not tell you, was a man who openly advocated the use of dynamite. Then the Spread-the-Light Fund, which distributed large numbers of copies of papers, advocating violence and outrage, and next the Land League Fund of $343,072. There was the O'Donnell Fund, which amounted to $55,000.

The President: Have you passed over the other?

The Attorney-General: I beg your pardon. The Martyrs' Testimonial Fund amounted to $8,000. The names of those who were paid out of this fund show that they were members of the families of those who were convicted in connection with the Phœnix Park murders. That will show you the kind of view which was advocated by the American party, with whom there was the most close and intimate connection. And I think it will appear that nobody who confessed to any crime was allowed to participate in that fund. The martyrs were those who were proved to be guilty. Then there was the O'Donnell Defence Fund. You will probably remember that the informer Carey went out from England to the Cape on board a ship in which was the man O'Donnell; and O'Donnell shot Carey dead in cold blood. No less than $55,000, or thereabouts, was subscribed for the defence of O'Donnell, and I think he was defended in the Old Bailey by my learned friend Sir Charles Russell. The Martyrs' Fund was started by Mr. Ford. The money was not to be given as alms, but as a testimonial, as explained in an article in the Irish World, to the men who had struck a blow for the independence of Ireland. I shall show your lordships that the representatives of Mr. Parnell and his party remained the correspondents of the Irish World after the most inflammatory articles had appeared in that paper. The Times has alleged that this conspiracy was fed by American gold, supplied by persons who encouraged outrages of the worst kind. I do not believe any statement can be produced by Mr. Parnell, or any of his followers, repudiating Mr. Ford. There was a slight estrangement between him and Mr. Parnell, mixed up, I think, with money matters, and Mr. Parnell expressed the opinion in the House of Commons that he could have got as much money if no Ford had existed. But there has been no repudiation in the slightest degree of the doctrines that Ford was preaching. In 1883 Mr. Parnell was charged in the House of Commons by Mr. Forster with respect to the conduct of the Land League, and when he answered he was unable to deny the charges made. There can be no doubt about this language, and I repeat and adopt it as my own. Mr. Forster said, "Do not let the hon. member suppose that I charge him with having planned any murder, or with complicity with murder. I wish there to be no mistake about this. I do charge the hon. member and his friends with having allowed themselves to continue leaders and avowed chiefs of an organisation not merely to devise the ruin of those opposed to them, but by this doctrine of boycotting to make life more miserable than death, and by setting on foot a system of outrage and murder which was the natural outcome of the system." That speech was delivered on Feb. 22, 1883, and to that charge Mr. Parnell has never given any denial. On the contrary, when he spoke in reply in the House, his answer was of the most trumpery and trivial description. Now I want to show how crime followed the steps of the Land League. This is revealed in a marked way by the statistics. In 1877-78-79 there were in Ireland no murders; in 1881-2 there were 50, and in 1883—84, when, owing to the Crimes Act, these operations could not be carried out, there was again only one murder. In 1885-86, and the portion of 1887 when the Crimes Act was not in operation, they rose again to 19. My case will be that the increase in these crimes was due to the action of the Land League, and, in the later period, to the action of the National League. In the cases of shooting at persons in the years 1877-78-79 the number was only 17; it rose to 148 in 1880-81-82; it fell to 16 in 1883; and in 1885-86-87 it rose again to 47. How graphic this is in connection with the consequences of the agitation described in that passage from Mr. Forster's speech which I have quoted. My learned friends may try to find another cause, where nobody else has been able to suggest it. In the case of incendiary fires the same proportions are shown. The number of cases was in 1877-78-79, 120; in 1880-81-82, 776; in 1883-84, 229; and in 1885-86-87, 322. Of firing into dwellings there were in 1877-78-79, 27 cases; in 1880-81-82, 325 cases; in 1883-84, 37; and in 1885-86-87, 111. Killing and maiming of cattle, 1877-78-79, 57; 1880-81-82, 300; 1883-84, 122; 1885-86-87, 183. Threatening notices, 1877-78-79, 674; 1880-81-82, 5,536. Will my learned friend suggest that that is not the Land League? 1883-84, 798; 1885-86-87, 1,154. Intimidation, 1877-78-79, 106; 1880-81-82, 946; 1883-84, 108; 1885-86-87, 259. When you take the individual counties the results are in some cases equally remarkable. Did Mr. Parnell know this or not? Did the Parnellite party know this or not? If they did not know it, how do they account for their ignorance? If they did know it, why is it that there was not one particle of that influence which they are so proud of exercised to prevent the increase? The peculiar feature of the crimes and outrages which characterised this period was this. It was practised upon a class who were to a great extent practically free from such outrage according to previous history. This system, which crushed out the life of the small tenant, which, practically speaking, prevented a man from taking land simply because it was the will of the League that it should not be taken, was a completely new feature. I think it will be found that the way in which the outrages were worked to enforce the decrees of the League pointed it out as simply a means for carrying out a purpose, that purpose being to destroy the power which existed, or was supposed to exist and ought to exist, in the hands of the Government of the day.

At this point the Commission adjourned to this morning, when the Attorney-General will continue his address.

In the Court of Appeal yesterday, before the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Lopes, Mr. Graham said there was an appeal in the list which he asked might be postponed till Saturday week, on the ground that both himself and Mr. Reid, Q.C., who were counsel in the case, were engaged on the Parnell Commission, and could not conveniently attend on the day the case was likely to come on.

The Master of the Rolls: If our proceedings are to be dependent on the time of gentlemen employed on that commission, much business will be disarranged. The commission is quite outside anything we lawyers have anything to do with, and, although I have not spoken to my learned brothers on the subject, I am of opinion that we ought to take no notice of you or your commission. (Laughter.)

Mr. Graham said that if the case, for instance, came on for argument on a Friday, it could only be part heard.

The Master of the Rolls: Then let it be part heard.

The matter then dropped.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL ON IRISH OUTRAGES.

A communication has been received from Mr. Carew, M.P., to the effect that he wrote to the Attorney-General a few days ago requesting him to cite instances in support of his statement at St. Helen's on the 18th inst. that "horses, donkeys, and cows were steeped in paraffin and burned to death in Ireland." Mr. Carew encloses the reply of the Attorney-General, and desires its publication. As to the two instances cited by Sir Richard Webster, he (Mr. Carew) will direct inquiries to be made in the districts where they are stated to have occurred. For the present he contents himself by saying that, even if there should be some foundation for them, they form but a very slender basis indeed for the very general indictment of the Irish people contained in his speech. The letter of Sir Richard Webster is as follows:

"The Attorney-General's Chambers, 2, Pump-court, Temple, Oct. 22.

"Sir—I this morning received your letter dated the 19th inst. On Sept. 18, 1881, at Maam, in the county Galway, paraffin was poured upon a donkey belonging to a man named Coyne, set fire to, and the donkey burned to a cinder. Coyne preferred a claim to the Maam Sessions in respect to this outrage.

"In the month of July, 1888, a similar outrage was perpetrated upon a donkey belonging to Captain De Moleyns, of Dingle, in the county Kerry, and the animal most severely burned.

"I also remember reading of other instances of similar outrages on cows and horses, though fortunately such are uncommon. As you have thought fit to send your letter to me to the papers, I must ask you to give the same publicity to my reply.—I am, your obedient servant, RICHD. WEBSTER.

"James L. Carew, Esq., M.P."

The Solicitor-General, Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., has forwarded a letter to Mr. John Finucane, M.P., who received the communication yesterday, apologising for having in a speech at Rochdale charged that gentleman with inciting to cruelty to dumb animals. He had based his charge on the Times report, and had not, as in the case of the High Sheriff of Limerick, seen any contradiction of the alleged speech until Mr. Finucane's letter appeared in the Times denying the statement attributed to him.

ANOTHER RUPTURE SUFFERER COMPLETELY CURED BY HARNESS' NEW HERNIA APPLIANCE AND TREATMENT.—Mr. Robert Ford, Cowleigh-road, North Malvern, writes, Oct. 5, 1888: "In May last I placed myself under your treatment, and after four months' trial of your new appliance I may now safely say that I am completely cured. My advice to those who suffer in a similar way is to place themselves at once under your care. It will always be a very great pleasure to me to answer any inquiries with respect to my case and your treatment." Sufferers may save themselves a lifetime of torture by adopting this the only reliable treatment. Examination free by an experienced and skilful surgeon at Harness' [illegible], 52, Oxford-street, London, W. (corner of Rathbone-place).—[ADVT.]

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

NEWMARKET NOTES.

The holiday character which Newmarket assumed in honour of the Cambridgeshire did not extend to Wednesday, for the simple reason that the Dewhurst Plate looked at the mercy of Donovan, and that the card contained no other event of more than ordinary interest beyond the All-Aged Stakes. If, however, the sport was hardly up to first-class form, it could not have been witnessed under more enjoyable circumstances, a perfect Autumn morning being succeeded by an equally perfect Autumn afternoon. The visitors to the Heath could not fail to appreciate the glorious weather, and the only drawback, as far as head-quarters is concerned, can be traced to the increasing hardness of the turf. The Rowley Mile has become like a turnpike road, and sound in limb, indeed, are the horses who feel no effects from racing thereon. Great as was the contrast in the general attendance from Tuesday very little difference could be noticed in the Jockey Clubstands, and the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Cambridge again gave their patronage to the "Sport of Kings." A commencement was made at one o'clock with the Bretby Welter Handicap, and in a field of ten, Zariba and Harpagon ultimately divided favouritism from The Tyke, Monsieur de Paris, and Lady Muncaster. Of this batch, Harpagon must be different to what he was when unplaced a month back in a selling race, as he had the race in hand throughout. In the New Nursery upon the Rous Course penalties were carried by Aristos and Carnival, and a little overweight by Domino. The first-named was in chief demand, owing to his Great Sapling Plate victory at Sandown Park, and next in market order stood Ixia. Besides being somewhat restive at the starting-post, Aristos did not seem to relish the hard ground, and was in trouble when he tried to race down the hill with Miss Ethel, Domino, Ixia, and Ketta. An attempt to hang to the right did not prevent Domino from winning cleverly by a neck, and Ixia has not been lucky since she commenced her Nursery career. The Dewhurst Plate was bound to be a small affair, if not so limited as last year when Friar's Balsam drove everything out of the field except Blanton and Sky Pilot. Three of Donovan's four opponents had already been beaten by him in the Middle Park Plate. The remaining youngster, Devil's Dance, was employed, doubtless, to make a pace for Australia, as he held a clear lead until he had raced himself to a standstill. Then the command remained with Enthusiast to the foot of the hill, when Donovan closed up and completed, in the commonest of canters, the same October double event that had previously fallen to the share of Chamant and Friar's Balsam. He now goes into Winter quarters with a splendid record, and, as there is Melanion to back him up, the Duke of Portland may be busy again in the classic races next year. Enthusiast reversed the Middle Park placings with Australia, and, as he beat the Ma Belle colt much farther than on Monday, he would claim a public preference to Royal Star if the Criterion had to be run over again. The two favourites for the Plate of £100 on the Ditch Mile were Ecstacy and King Cole, of whom the one hit her leg, and had to be pulled up, and the other could not stay a yard more than five furlongs. Blood Royal, a consistent performer in races of this sort, could only finish third to Heptarchy and Symphony; and, although the former swerved almost on the post, Fred. Barrett was just able to straighten her, and gain the verdict by a head. At no time, perhaps, has Heptarchy run up to his private form, and there was no bid at the sale price of £300. The odds entrusted to Cardinal Mai for the Selling Plate of five furlongs were bowled over by Pippin, and then followed a very interesting affair in the shape of the All-Aged Stakes. The withdrawal of Noble Chieftain left Fullerton and Braw Lass to do battle against one three-year-old in Hortari, and three two-year-olds in Link Boy, Paloma, and Seclusion. There was a fair battle royal between Paloma and Link Boy for favouritism, and it was a close thing also in the ring between Braw Lass and Fullerton, the latter, who had taken part in the Cambridgeshire, meeting Braw Lass upon 7lb better terms than a fortnight ago. The two seniors kept the youngsters on the stretch the whole of the way, and although Paloma stuck to them. After Link Boy had been shaken off she, in turn, collapsed a hundred yards from home. Braw Lass then pulled through by a head, the third verdict of that kind in succession. Owing to a dispute with regard to this engagement the sale of the mare to Mr. Low, which had been in progress, had fallen through. The High Weight Handicap saw Red Palmer confirm his winning form of the opening day; and, in conclusion, Sea Song triumphed in the Subscription Plate from Toscano and Emerald. During the afternoon it was mentioned in well-informed quarters that next year the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire will be run later in the week than Tuesday, and I am sure the change has only to be made to meet with much approval. To-morrow ANTIBES should win the Troy Stakes, CEDAR the Bretby Nursery, NOBLE CHIEFTAIN the Plate of £200, SAVANT the Feather Plate, SWEETBRIAR the Cheveley Stakes, PAGET or BARSKIMMING the Selling Nursery, HARPAGON or GRANDISON the Houghton Handicap, ROSE D'AMOUR the Two-Year-Old Selling Plate, and ACME the Free Handicap.

Miss Ethel soon assumed the lead, having for her nearest attendants Leap Year and Ixia, with Domino and Aristos next, these being in advance of William the Silent, Corbeille, and L'Avare. No change occurred until the lot reached the distance, where Aristos was beaten, and Domino shot out, followed by Ixia, the latter of whom could never get on terms, and was beaten easily by a neck; three lengths dividing the second and third. Devil's Dance made strong running from Ma Belle colt and Enthusiast, with Donovan waiting in the rear, and so they reached the Bushes, where Devil's Dance was beaten, and Enthusiast came on from Donovan, the latter of whom drew out at the distance, and won in a canter by half a length; a length dividing second and third. Blood Royal made play from Brackley and Needles, with Lady Kars filly and Ecstasy lying at the head of the others, and so they ran for about half the journey, where Ecstasy broke down. Blood Royal was collared at the distance by Heptarchy and Symphony, the latter pair running a fine race home, which resulted in favour of Heptarchy by a head; a length and a half divided the second and third. Lady Kars filly was fourth, Brackley fifth, Abaddon sixth, and Ecstasy, who was pulled up before reaching the post, a long way last. The winner was not sold.

The winner was sold to Mr. O. Bouvenius for 330 guineas.

The ALL-AGED STAKES of 20 sovs each, h ft, with 200 added; weight for age; mares and geldings allowed 3lb. Bretby Stakes Course (6 furlongs). 6 subs.

Braw Lass was the quickest away, and she cut out the work from Fullerton and Seclusion, with Paloma just in front of Link Boy. In this order they reached the distance, where Braw Lass was collared by Fullerton, the pair running an exciting race home, which fell to Braw Lass by a head; three lengths dividing the second and third.

BLOODSTOCK SALE AT NEWMARKET.—A beautiful morning induced a fairly large company to attend at the Park Paddocks yesterday, where Messrs. Tattersall had forth a good prospect of an interesting sale. The catalogue included a selection of the horses in training sent up by Mr. Henry Milner. Mr. R. Sherwood bought the two-year-old Blue Peter for 500 guineas, and Litigation, another youngster of same age, fell to Captain Machell for 210 guineas. Neither Eirldspord, Whistle Jacket, The Cob, nor Belisarius II. reached their respective reserves. [illegible], looking remarkably fresh and well, was sent up by Mr. A. Taylor, but no purchaser was forthcoming; and the well-known Kinsky, upon whom a reserve of 3,000 guineas was placed, returns to Lambourne unsold.

FOOTBALL.

LONDON v. SUSSEX.—This Association match was decided at Brighton yesterday, when the home team, who have only played one contest previously, met a powerful Metropolitan eleven, and succeeded in playing a drawn game. Splendid weather prevailed, and there was consequently a good attendance of spectators. The county won the toss, and London started the ball a few minutes after the advertised time. The visitors were soon on the aggressive, and, from a general attack that followed, a splendidly judged corner kick by Squires, the ball was sent through off Saunders. After this Sussex played with considerable vigour, and, when in close proximity to the London goal, Saunders passed to Brann, who equalised with a splendid shot. Shortly afterwards C. F. Ingram added a second goal to the credit of Sussex, who, at half-time, were leading by two goals to one. Upon resuming the game ruled pretty even, till at length, after a splendid run by the Old Etonian, A. T. B. Dunn, the score was again equalised. Both teams worked hard to the finish, but no further point was secured, and the game ended as stated above.

MAORIS v. HULL.—This was the opening fixture of the Maoris in the North. Quite 10,000 spectators were present on the Hull ground. The play was very fast and even, the only point secured being obtained in the opening half, when the Yorkshiremen through Holt crossed their adversaries' goal-line, the place was not improved upon. At half-time the score stood: Hull one try and one minor; New Zealanders, four minors. The final score was: Hull, one try and three minors; Maoris, four minors.

BILLIARDS.

PEALL v. MITCHELL.—These old opponents advanced their spot-barred match of 3,000 points up a third stage, at the Aquarium yesterday, before a very large company. During the first two days Peall had taken the lead, and he left off on Tuesday evening with an advantage of 780 points, the respective scores being—Peall, 3,000; Mitchell, 2,214. Yesterday he was again in brilliant form, and there is no doubt that he has improved wonderfully at the spot-barred game. Altogether he made five breaks of over 100—viz., 175, 164, 163, 119, and 100—and he was also responsible for 64, 56, 57, 54, and 51. Mitchell played well, especially in the evening, and he was unfortunate on three occasions in breaking down near three figures. His chief efforts were 97, 98, 85, 72, 62, and 51. At the end of the day's play he was 1,232 points behind. Present score—Peall, 4,502; Mitchell, 3,270.

METROPOLITAN BEER AND WINE TRADE PROTECTION SOCIETY.—The sixth annual dinner held in support of the funds of this society took place last night in the Venetian Chamber of the Holborn Restaurant, some 160 members being present. Mr. George Baker, president of the society, was the chairman. The primary object of the association is to protect the trade whenever its interests are affected by any measure under the consideration of the Legislature. In responding to the toast of the "Lords and Commons," Mr. Gent-Davis, M.P., observed that the brewers and distillers of this country required that protection from the State to which they were entitled, taking into consideration that they were more harassed and worried by piecemeal legislation than any other body of traders he could think of, and that from them the Government derived more benefit than from any other class in the kingdom. He said they would have to unite the beer, wine, and spirit trades into one huge body determined to strengthen their interests, and promised always to protect their trade from undue interference, and whenever he had the opportunity to place in a fair and honest manner their cause before the Government. (Cheers.) The chairman then gave the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Metropolitan Beer and Wine Trade Protection Society," and, in so doing, remarked that the society had been established upwards of half a century, and was about to celebrate its fifty-fifth birthday. During the last fifty years they had fought many battles and had gained many victories, by which they had secured great privileges for their trade. He believed that, in the coming session of Parliament, the teetotal flag was again to be unfurled. This, he ventured to think, would prove no flag of truce, but war to the death, and they would find that, after fifty-four years of hard fighting, there was far more need for protective organisation than ever. During the evening the secretary (Mr. Colin Oliphant) announced subscriptions amounting to 200 guineas.

MR. IRVING ON ACTORS AND ACTRESSES.

Mr. Henry Irving was last night entertained at supper, at the Arts Club, Manchester, Mr. Maclure, M.P., presiding. Responding to the toast of his health Mr. Irving said: Let me thank you sincerely for your hearty and spontaneous welcome. I hardly know how to reply to the many kind things said of me by Mr. Maclure. I only hope, for his sake as well as for my own, that some few of them are true. It is always a little difficult to me to know what to say on these occasions. Mephistopheles and the devil are completely used up. They have been of great service to me; if people did not like Mephistopheles they were too good, and one could amiably beseech favour for the poor devil himself; if they did like him one could say that he had never been welcomed with such fervour before, and one was glad to find that he held a warm place in their regard, and so on. But these harmless little jokes are played out now, and the devil's occupation is gone; though I should hardly be surprised to see myself yet caricatured as a sort of fiend of pride and malignity, with a trumpet in one hand and a pitchfork or club in the other, for having lately said so much in praise of or for repelling attacks against my calling, especially against the women of my calling. The men are able to take care of themselves. A wise man has said that "You had better have a bad epitaph when you die than the actors' ill-report while you live"; but actresses are not so able to get a hearing, and it is for them more than the men that I always feel inclined to fight. I must confess that I have been filled with astonishment on reading the attacks upon hundreds and hundreds of good women (for assail the few and you assail the many)—mothers, daughters, wives, and sisters, who earn their daily bread upon the stage in the honourable practice of their calling. The theatre has been, and always will be, assailed—that perhaps is a distinction—and there are plenty to defend it. The public and the mighty Press of our country are ever ready to defend the right; but it certainly has been left for this year of grace 1888 to see a deliberate attack made upon the women of the stage—not a very chivalrous crusade to enter upon; not work that a Knight of the Round Table would care to engage in. But there is one consolation. This band of Bayards does not consist of many. They are a few, an unhappy few, and are notable exceptions to the great mass of honourable English gentlemen, and it is well to bear in mind what axes of their own they have to grind when, under the profession of purity of purpose, they commit these wanton assaults. But I ought to beg your pardon for introducing this subject here to-night, for Manchester has long ago settled its attitude towards the theatre, and I may say Lancashire has also, judging by Bolton the other day. There never could have been a more gratifying recognition of the actor's calling than in the streets of Bolton on this day week. They were thronged with a mass of people ready with a most generous and hearty welcome. Such a demonstration would have been impossible twenty years ago, but to-day it is a part of our national life, largely due to the determination of you Lancashire folk to give expression to your convictions. You have compelled attention and respect for your great principle, "Man to man the world o'er." I was thinking over this Bolton welcome with feelings of pride and gratitude when I was told that allusion had been made to me at a meeting there on Wednesday evening, with anything but a sentiment of brotherly love, and it appears that a certain reverend doctor had travelled down from London with the praiseworthy purpose of endeavouring to thwart the wishes of those who were anxious to open the Bolton Free Library on Sunday—as you have, I believe, with the greatest success opened your library here, for many years. A poor errand this, gentlemen! I would commend to the reverend gentleman Charles Kingsley's words, "We should reverence books, and look upon them as useful and weighty things. If good and true, whether about religion or politics, farming, trade, or medicine, they are the message of Christ"; and Charles Kingsley would, I am sure, have added, "and ought to be open to all in free libraries on Sundays." Well, although I did not catch the speaker's eye at Bolton, I caught sight of the speaker's name, and found it to be the Rev. John Gritton. Then my surprise ceased. I have not the honour of knowing this gentleman personally, but I knew him well as one who, some time ago, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, uttered as gross a libel upon the theatre as it has been my ill-fortune to read, and after its falsity had been pointed out to him, had not the Christian spirit to retract. Dr. Gritton hits below the belt, for he made my visit to Bolton the occasion of an allusion to me, warning the people that perhaps the opening of the Free Library on Sunday would lead to the opening of the theatre on Sunday. Now, Mr. Gritton knew better, and I take this opportunity of saying among so many good friends that English actors would be the very first to resent and oppose any such proposition. When I have been acting in cities where the Sunday performances are the most popular of the week, I have never played on Sunday, and I need hardly tell you I never should, and against any such deduction as that of the rev. gentleman I enter my protest—and I do so with some regret, for no one has more respect than I have for the Rev. Dr. Gritton's high calling, and I am always sorry when I see uncharitableness and ungraciousness in any way associated with it. But we are agreed on this as on many other matters, that there should be the greatest consideration shown on Sundays for those who spend their weekdays from morning till night in arduous and sometimes irksome toil. The toleration which is accorded to-day to many ideas which were formerly tabooed is due, as I said before, greatly to the teaching of the Manchester school—and I am one, I am proud to say, of the Manchester school of actors. It was here amongst you that I went to school for some years at your Theatre Royal, and a very good school it was. It was you who encouraged my progress, cheered me on, and inspired me to aim at higher things. How long ago that is I must not say. According to some a very long time ago. "How old is Irving?" said some friends going home in a train the other night. "Irving! Oh, he's a regular old one; heaven only knows what his age is." And I hope that I shall grow older and older in your esteem, older in your friendship and goodwill; and I trust there will be many occasions in the future when I shall be amongst you, realising the happiness dear to good fellows of good comradeship and good fellowship. (Cheers.)

Other toasts followed.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

OPENING OF THE COURTS.

Yesterday being the first day of Michaelmas sittings, and the Long Vacation having come to an end, the Courts of Justice were opened with the customary formalities. The event was preceded by the usual breakfast given by the Lord Chancellor at the House of Lords to her Majesty's judges, Queen's counsel and benchers of the four Inns of Court, but in consequence of the death of his lordship's brother, Judge Giffard, of the Exeter County-court, Lord Halsbury was unable to be present, and the Lord Chief Justice of England presided in his absence. When the learned judges arrived at the Royal Courts, about half-past one o'clock, the Lord Chief Justice took the lead in the procession of the judges up the hall, in the place of the Lord Chancellor.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT—Oct. 24.

END OF THE "GORDON-BAILLIE" ROMANCE.

Robert Percival Bodley Frost and Annie Frost were again placed in the dock charged with conspiring to obtain money and goods by false pretences.

Mr. Poland and Mr. Mead prosecuted on behalf of the Treasury; Mr. Kemp, Q.C., and Mr. Rose Innes represented the female prisoner; and Mr. Besley and Mr. Partridge appeared for the other defendant.

Annie Frost, or "Mrs. Gordon-Baillie," was again fashionably dressed in a brown costume, and a short cloak of many-coloured plush and silk. She wore no hat. Frost was dressed in a dark suit.

The evidence, as disclosed on the previous day, showed that during the first six months of this year the prisoners, living as well-to-do married people, had carried on a systematic series of frauds upon tradesmen in Westminster and the West-end generally, driving up in a brougham, which was never paid for, to shops where they purchased articles with cheques that were dishonoured, securing from the shopkeepers, when the cheque was for a larger sum than the bill, the balance in hard cash.

Mr. Kemp now opened the defence, in support of which no witnesses were called. He informed the jury that Annie Frost was a lady by birth and education, who for some time appeared, by her bank-book, to have been in receipt of £2,000 a year, and that the scrapes she had got into now were simply the result of being in temporarily straitened circumstances.

Mr. Besley followed on behalf of the male prisoner, contending that if the police had not interfered all the tradesmen would have been reimbursed by Mrs. Frost, sen.

After the Recorder had summed up, the jury expressed a wish to retire to consider their verdict. They only took five minutes to make up their minds. The prisoners had hardly been removed from the dock when they were summoned back, as the jury had agreed. In reply to the usual questions, the foreman replied that they found both the prisoners guilty.

James Dow, formerly criminal officer of the Dundee Sheriff Court, was then called.

Mr. Poland: Have you got a previous conviction against Annie Frost?—Yes.

Mr. Kemp: In what name is it?—Mary Ann Bruce Sutherland.

Mr. Poland: What is the date of it?—December, 1872, for "falsehood, fraud, and wilful imposition," according to the Scotch law, and she was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment.

Mr. Kemp: Mrs. Frost absolutely denies that she has ever been convicted at all.

Mr. Dow: I recognise the woman in the dock plainly as the woman who was convicted by the sheriff at Dundee. I arrested her myself in that town, was present at the trial, and had charge of the case all along from beginning to end. I am quite sure she is the same woman. I have got her photograph with me now.

Mr. Kemp: This is sixteen years ago. Have you seen her since that time?—Not since she was convicted.

Mr. Poland: I may say, my lord, that the statement made by the prisoners that they were married in a private room in Belgium by a Roman Catholic priest—a private room having been selected because they were Protestants—is a mere sham, and the name of "Gordon-Baillie" was merely assumed for the purposes of fraud in getting hold of subscriptions which were supposed to go to the Scotch crofters.

Mr. Kemp: That is hardly fair to say.

Mr. Poland: It is the fact.

Inspector Marshall, of Scotland-yard, was then called to give his researches into the past history of the prisoners. He said: For the past fifteen years, in fact ever since she came out of prison, we have had complaints about this woman. I have her whole career, her whole life, here, if the Court would care to hear it.

Mr. Poland: Under how many names has she gone?

Inspector Marshall: Forty different names. (Laughter.) She has given her age here as twenty-nine, but that is merely to deceive. As a matter of fact, she was born at Peterhead in February, 1848. I have had complaints about her from all over Scotland, England, and Belgium.

Mr. Poland: I understand there are no charges against Frost except in connection with this woman?

Inspector Marshall: None. In 1877 the woman defrauded a Mrs. Brown of something like £300, the value of an expensive trousseau. For that a warrant was granted against her and a person named Kate Ryan. Ryan was arrested, but the prisoner bolted to America. I have the name of the vessel in which she sailed, and the captain's, if they are required. She has also been in Turin, Florence, and Rome. In all these places she committed frauds, and I believe that in Turin she underwent a term of imprisonment on that account. Some five years ago the friends of the late Sir Richard King applied to the police to prosecute her, and the inquiry was put into my hands by Mr. St. John Wontner, who conducts the prosecution now.

Mr. Poland: With regard to the male prisoner's mother, Mrs. Frost, she is a thoroughly respectable person.

Mr. Marshall: Yes, she has furnished him with money from time to time. I may just mention that the prisoners returned from New Zealand or Australia, in October last, and at once took a furnished house at Broadstairs. There they carried on a system of frauds, swindling tradespeople right and left. They paid no rent, and went away leaving the woman's children, who were taken to the workhouse by the relieving officer.

Mr. Poland: She has four children by Wright, has she not?

Inspector Marshall: She has four children, but I cannot say that they are by Wright, and she has another by Frost, making five altogether. The person in whose house the children were left has been defrauded out of £40, all the recompense she had being worthless cheques.

Mr. Partridge: Did not the magistrate say that there was no case against them with regard to Barton Hall?

Inspector Marshall: Oh, no. That was in regard to Walthamstow, where she had defrauded a gentleman of £200.

The Recorder, in passing sentence, said it was unnecessary to use a single syllable of comment on the career of the female prisoner. The sentence on her would be five years' penal servitude. With regard to the male prisoner, it was true he had not been convicted before, but his crime was serious enough. The sentence on him would be eighteen months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Frost and "Gordon-Baillie" received their sentence with equanimity, and, although the latter at first assumed a fainting attitude, and leant her uncovered head upon her companion's shoulder, she soon got better, and walked quietly downstairs.

Mr. Poland pointed out that the magistrate who had first inquired into the allegations against the prisoners marked the charge-sheet with a special recommendation of Inspector Marshall for the care and ability he had displayed in the case. Inspector Marshall had conducted it for some time before, on the representation of the magistrate, legal assistance was given to him by the Treasury.

The Recorder: I quite agree with the learned magistrate. I think Mr. Marshall is entitled to very great credit for the way in which he has tracked the careers of these people and brought the case before the Court.

THE CHARGE OF PUBLISHING INDECENT LITERATURE.—Mr. Clewer, on behalf of the defendant, made an application to postpone the trial of Mr. Vizetelly, for publishing the English versions of M. Zola's novels, "Germinal," "La Terre," and "Nana" until next session, in order that counsel might properly prepare the defence.—Mr. Poland strongly objected, and intimated that the Solicitor-General, who would lead the prosecution, was prepared to appear any day this session that the Recorder might name. Ultimately the trial was fixed for next Monday.

SURREY SESSIONS—Oct. 24.

(Before Sir WILLIAM HARDMAN.)

A SUCCESSFUL APPEAL.—Mr. Alfred John Paine, proprietor of The Finish Public-house, Lynton-road, Bermondsey, appealed against a conviction by Mr. Sheil, the magistrate at Southwark Police-court, for having his house open during prohibited hours.—Mr. De Michele supported the conviction; Mr. George Lyon, Mr. F. H. Lowe, and Mr. George Elliott appeared for the appellant.—A police-inspector entered the house about midnight, when a lad was being served, and, taking out his watch, said it was 6½ minutes past the time for closing. That statement was denied.—Mr. Lowe, for the appellant, was about to address the Bench when Sir William Hardman interposed and said there would be no necessity to call any witnesses for the appellant, because he and his colleagues were unanimously of opinion that there should have been no conviction at all. There was no reliable evidence as to the time, judged as it had to be by a few minutes. The appeal would be allowed.

(Before Mr. GEORGE SOMES.)

HORSE-FLESH IN THE NEW CUT.—Charles Langley, 21, was charged with obtaining 1s. 9d. from one Wm. Morrish, by means of a false pretence, by selling him horseflesh as beef.—Mr. Horace Avory appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. George Elliott defended.—The case has already been reported.—The jury, after a short deliberation, found defendant guilty, and Mr. Somes said the poor must be protected against the impositions of such men as the prisoner, and sentenced him to three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

WESTMINSTER.—"OUT OF TOWN."—Mary Davis, 18, a well-dressed girl, was charged on remand, before Mr. Biron, with stealing £5 in gold, a pair of gold earrings, and eight bottles of sherry, the money and property of her employer, Mr. Joseph Pournin, chef de cuisine, of 46, Brompton-square.—Mr. Duerdin Dutton defended.—Prosecutor is in partnership with a Mr. Allibert in a dressmaking business, at 46, Brompton-square, and both were out of town the latter part of last month and beginning of this, their respective servants and Miss Allibert, a young lady about twenty, being left in charge. Mr. Pournin returned on the 15th inst., missed the key of the wine cupboard, and spoke to the prisoner about it. She left the house next morning with two months' wages due to her, and, subsequently the money and the earrings were missed from a drawer in a bed-room. She was apprehended by Detective-sergeant Church, and she then said that she only knew about the wine. She took one bottle herself, and she knew who had the others and put the empty bottles under her bed, but she would not say.—Mr. Dutton said his instructions were that each of the girls had young men in the house all night, and that the wine was consumed in a general orgie.—Miss Florence Allibert, a stylishly-dressed young woman, who attended the court on subpœna to give evidence, examined by Mr. Dutton, said that she was left with the servants during the absence from town of her father and his partner. She left London the day after her father, and returned about Sept. 28. From that date until Oct. 5 she slept at Brompton-square. She had a gentleman friend—there was nothing extraordinary about that. (Laughter.) This gentleman had dined with her there.—Mr. Dutton: You did not inform your father? (Laughter.)—Witness: He knows all about it.—Mr. Dutton: Did any one else visit you?—Witness: Another gentleman came, but he only stayed a few minutes.—Mr. Dutton: What did you have to drink at the dinner?—Witness: We might have had two bottles of champagne and some burgundy—three or four bottles of the latter—but not all the same evening. The wine was ordered by me, and did not come from the prosecutor's cellar. In answer to other questions the witness admitted that she saw Mary Davis's young man on one occasion. It was explained by the prisoner that he was her brother-in-law, or her cousin, "or something of the sort." (Loud laughter.) She did not give the servants permission to have young men stay with them all night, and she positively denied that a gentleman passed the night with her. One of the servants did not bring up their breakfast in bed. Pressed as to the name of the gentleman who was alleged to have passed the night with her, she reluctantly wrote it on paper, and the case was adjourned till later in the afternoon, for further evidence to be obtained.—Miss Allibert was then recalled and further cross-examined. She was obliged to admit that she went away with the gentleman and stayed a week with him in Gloucester-place, Littlehampton.—Mr. Dutton: Now, after that, will you swear he never slept with you at Brompton-square?—Witness: Not at Brompton-square.—Mr. Biron: Perhaps you are unaware of the penalties you may render yourself liable to by not telling the truth. It is hardly necessary to press the matter further.—Isabella Holloway, servant to Mr. Allibert, was examined, and admitted that she drank some of the prosecutor's wine. She did not know where it came from.—Mr. Dutton: You had some nice games while the prosecutor was away.—Witness: No. Prisoner had her young man in, and a young gentleman called on Miss Allibert, but I always fetched a cab for him to go away at night.—Mr. Biron said the money and jewellery were not traced, and the case resolved itself into a charge of stealing wine. It was elicited that the accused came into the situation with a good character, and it was clear that no jury would think of convicting her under the circumstances. Without saying anything which would unduly reflect on Miss Allibert, it was not a surprising fact that the bottles were empty at the end of her three weeks' housekeeping.—Prisoner was discharged.

LONDON, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 25.

The Queen has approved of the appointment of the Duke of Westminster as Lord-Lieutenant of the newly-created county of London.

Our Paris correspondent telegraphs a summary of the evidence given yesterday by General Boulanger before the Revision Committee. In the course of it he denied that there was danger of a dictatorship, or any chance of a monarchical restoration.

In receiving some Neapolitan pilgrims yesterday, the Pope denounced the usurpations and violence of the Italian Government, and declared that Rome should ever remain the capital of the Catholic world.

Reports have been received at Cairo corroborating the rumoured appearance of a White Pasha in the Bahr-el-Gazelle province.

The Metropolitan of Servia has pronounced the dissolution of the marriage of King Milan and Queen Natalie.

Yesterday the proceedings before the Parnell Commission began with an application for further discovery of documents in the possession of the Times. Ultimately it was agreed that their lordships should themselves examine the documents before deciding whether they should be disclosed. The Attorney-General intimated that the Hibernian Bank had disobeyed the direction of the Court to produce their books, whereupon the President made a significant allusion to the "powers" of the Commissioners, which include the right to arrest and punish contumacious parties. The Attorney-General continued his opening statement, announcing that he should call Captain O'Shea as a witness respecting the Kilmainham negotiations, and that he should ask Mr. Parnell in the box what steps he took to repress outrages prior to the Phœnix Park tragedy. He also said he should prove that Mr. Parnell was reluctant to sign the manifesto subsequently issued by himself and Mr. Dillon and Mr. Davitt, condemning the murders. The original letter of May 15, 1882, purporting to bear the signature of Mr. Parnell, was for the first time produced in court, and orders were given that it should be photographed.

Mr. W. H. Smith inspected a portion of the works of the Manchester Ship Canal, yesterday, and was subsequently entertained at luncheon by the Mayor of Salford.

Mr. Stanhope, Secretary of State for War, has consented to meet the Lord Mayor Elect to-day, to consider the proposals as to the Volunteers taking part in the procession of November 9, and the raising of a fund for their better equipment.

Captain St. John Mildmay, secretary of the National Rifle Association, has made a preliminary inspection of the sites around Brighton which have been suggested as the future ground of the annual Volunteer contests, and will, it is understood, report favourably to the committee.

The Royal Courts of Justice were opened yesterday for the Michaelmas sittings.

An exhibition of Elizabethan relics connected with the Armada Tercentenary was opened in the Grand Saloon of Drury-lane Theatre yesterday afternoon by the Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham.

Mr. Henry Irving was entertained at the Arts Club, Manchester, last night, and, in responding to the toast of his health, vindicated the women of his calling from some recent attacks. He went on to speak in favour of the opening of free libraries on Sundays.

Mrs. Charles Turner, of Liverpool, has given £20,000 towards the formation of a fund for pensioning incumbents in the diocese of York who feel themselves incapacitated from further duty. The same lady had previously bestowed a like gift for the diocese of Liverpool.

At a meeting in Leeds yesterday, the West Yorkshire colliery owners passed a resolution reaffirming their previous determination not at present to give the 10 per cent. advance demanded by the workmen.

Robert Percival Bodley Frost and Annie Frost, otherwise known as "Mrs. Gordon-Baillie," and bearing many other aliases, were yesterday found guilty, at the Central Criminal Court, of conspiring to obtain goods by false pretences. Evidence having been given of a previous conviction of the female prisoner at Dundee in 1872, Inspector Marshall gave an account of her subsequent career. She had passed under no fewer than forty different names, and complaints had been received of her fraudulent proceedings from different parts of Scotland, England, Belgium, America, and Australia. The Recorder sentenced the woman to five years' penal servitude, and Frost to eighteen months' imprisonment.

On the Stock Exchange, yesterday, continuation rates at the settlement were easier, yet the tendency was irregular. Home railways declined, on the closing of a weak account, and a few of the American lines were lower, but Canadian and Mexican improved. Some of the Foreign Government bonds advanced, and others, notably Argentine and Buenos Ayres issues, receded. Copper shares were inactive, and diamond mines firm. Consols declined 1-16 to ⅛ per cent.

WE have grown so accustomed to modern processes of transforming the face of the world that even the record of their achievement hardly attracts attention, while intimations of their expected conquests escape notice altogether. "It is announced from Constantinople," we briefly stated yesterday, "that a concession has been sanctioned by Imperial Iradé for the construction of a railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem." In a few years, then, those that go down from the Holy City to take ship at Joppa, as men have been doing for thousands of years—for it has been the port of Jerusalem since before SOLOMON's time—will go by steam, with a first, a second, or a third class ticket, according to their means or preference. Their journey will be through a land as rich in natural beauty as in sacred associations. From Jerusalem westward to Jaffa extends—as, indeed, it does northward, according to some of the ancient commentators, as far as Cæsarea—the valley or plain of Sharon, that broad and fertile tract of land which lies between the mountains of Central Palestine and the Mediterranean Sea. As the traveller approaches the port he will traverse a region all golden and green with the orange and the citron, here surpassing in fragrance and flavour the produce of all the other fruit groves of Palestine. Of Jaffa itself, with its exposed roadstead, its depleted population, and its languishing trade, there is not much to be said that is favourable or interesting from the modern utilitarian point of view; but the chequered history of the Syrian port abounds with interest from the time when King HIRAM of Tyre landed there his cedar and pinewood for SOLOMON's Temple down to the latest of its many experiences—that in which NAPOLEON paid so heavily in the loss of his plague-stricken army and in the infliction by his own act of an indelible stigma upon his name. Joppa was the starting-place of JONAH and the scene of PETER's vision. It was taken and retaken in the Maccabæan wars, annexed to the Roman Empire by POMPEY, ceded to HEROD by JULIUS CÆSAR, and demolished by VESPASIAN. In the Crusades it became a veritable plaything of war, now held by Christian and now by Saracen. It was sacked and destroyed by MALEK ADEL, rebuilt by FREDERICK II. and St. LOUIS; and passed finally, after these many vicissitudes, into the hands of its present owners in the thirteenth century. And now, after all this stormy and romantic history, it is to form the terminus of the Jaffa and Jerusalem Railway—an innovation which it is not too much to describe as entirely alien from anything which the town has hitherto undergone. Possibly a new era of commercial activity—as that expression at least is understood by Oriental races—may be opening for the historic port of Jerusalem. It is certainly entitled to plead that for the first twelve centuries of the Christian era it has simply passed from one period of convulsion to another, and that the turbulent course of human affairs from the dissolution of the Roman Empire through the rise, dominance, and decay of Islam allowed it no reasonable chance of development.

It is not in Jaffa, however, or in its future as likely to be affected by the new Imperial concession, that the Christian world is chiefly interested. To Christendom at large the port of Jerusalem stands in this matter for the Holy City itself, and the European will welcome a railway extension—the very phrase has a startling sound in this connection—which brings Jerusalem sensibly nearer to the traveller from the West. It is true the distance to be spanned by the railway is but thirty or forty miles, but that, when necessary to be traversed on horseback, adds a day to a journey already sufficiently long for the tastes of many travellers, besides the fact that such a mode of locomotion is to some unsuitable and to others impossible. When Jaffa, which is three days from Brindisi, itself the same time-distance from London, has been brought within a couple of hours by railway from the Holy City, it will be possible for an Englishman who has spent one Sunday in Westminster Abbey to pass the next on the site of the Temple. It is only, as we have said, because marvels become familiar by repetition that this wonder of a sudden transit from the modern to the ancient, this re-creation in six days of a world which, in one sense, has as utterly passed away as in another it is imperishable, have so little to say to the careless modern mind. Yet, it is, perhaps, rather on the nearer view of the contrast that its strangest aspect is brought out. The railway which will hereafter carry its daily freight of restless life from the Syrian seaport to the sacred city—eternal in a far truer sense than Rome—is an object of more interest on its spiritual side, that is to say as an embodiment of human thought, than as a mere material symbol of human power. It is not that man has gained so much since the days when a voice preached in the streets of Jerusalem which was to echo round the world, but that, having gained so much, having advanced so far, having won so many victories over nature and tamed so many of her forces, he remains still so essentially the same. Compared with one of those "strangers within the gates" of that city who might have listened to that divine voice before taking his departure by slow stages for the sea-coast, the modern visitor to Jerusalem may seem to himself a vastly more developed specimen of the race to which he belongs. He has matured faculties of which the ancient sojourner at Jerusalem possessed only the germ; he commands forces which had in those days no existence; he has the common pass-key to whole treasuries of knowledge which were locked against the profoundest sages of that earlier time. Beyond the limits, however, of that narrow circle in which all our vaunted civilisation moves, wherein is he wiser—we need hardly ask wherein he is happier—than one who mounted his mule at the gates of Jerusalem two thousand years ago for his journey to the sea? Is he even nearer to what the Wise King of old described as the beginning of wisdom? Is "understanding" of the only kind which SOLOMON recognised as worthy of the name more easily within his reach?

Were it only for its fertility in the suggestion of thoughts and inquiries like these, the new project of which we hear would be full of interest. All such enterprises are and must be practical from the nature of the case; and we are glad that the modern taste has outgrown that sickly dilettantism which caused them to be otherwise regarded. It is true, no doubt, that a railway line is not as a rule an æsthetically beautiful object. It may be thrust into places and among scenes in which its presence cannot possibly be otherwise than an offence to the most rudimentary artistic sensibilities. In some cases it may violate solitudes whose loneliness is their chief or only magic; and in all such instances, of course, it is only human nature to resent the intrusion. How far the Jaffa-Jerusalem Railway may be likely to offend in either of these particulars we do not undertake to say. As a blot on the landscape, or as a disturbing intruder on its ancient peace, it may, for aught we know, excite a certain amount of reasonable or, at any rate, of natural disfavour in many minds; but, considered merely as an intensely modern product brought into sharp contrast with changeless antiquity, we are glad, we repeat, to think that the "superfine" scruples which would once have protested against it have gone out of fashion. In truth, they had never any root of reality in them. Those who a generation ago delighted to advertise the supposed romance and poetry of their natures by objecting to the intrusion of the modern upon the ancient world were, for the most part, but insincere smatterers in the arts in whose name they professed to speak. They resented, or pretended to resent, the contact of the things of to-day with the more venerable relics of the ages, because they had failed either to feel the poetry or to fathom the significance of the present. A more thoughtful, and, in the truer sense of the word, a more poetic attitude of mind towards these touching and inspiring contrasts has now grown up among us, to the great enlargement and enlightenment of our sympathies. Nowadays, no one whose view of the world and of mankind is wider than that of the weakest-minded and most frivolous prattlers of pseudo-antiquarianism, will affect horror at such a piece of news as that on which we have been commenting. No one beyond the limits of that class will repeat the parrot cry of "sacrilege," which used to be so commonly heard on similar occasions. Those who have eyes for anything more than mere superficial aspects will not linger long over the mere outward circumstances of the work which is to be taken in hand. They will dwell little upon the unlovely material appliances of rail and sleeper, or unpicturesque features of embankment and cutting, and will rather, or we should say will exclusively, turn their thoughts t the consideration of the marvellous intellectual history, of the strange mundane destiny of which all these objects are but the sign and the symbol. And, doing so, they can hardly fail to feel that the union of Jerusalem with its seaport by the wonder-working hand of the engineer adds a deeper poetry to the spot than any that it takes away.

The undoubted prestige and popularity of the annual Cat Show is in itself a good and sufficient reason for inviting some inquiry into the mysteries attendant on the nature, history, and character of the most favoured of domestic animals. Mysteries, indeed they may well be called; for there is something akin to weirdness and the occult in all that touches cats and their ways. Naturalists, for instance, who are agreed about dogs, wolves, and foxes, and all their varieties, are always at war as to the origin of "pussy," some deriving it from the "maniculata," or gloved cat, of Northern Africa, while others, with Professor Owen, discourse learnedly of "deciduous molar teeth with three roots" and other subtle points as being arguments against this view. At all events, the ancient Egypt which has been the cradle of civilisation may also be fairly held to take rank as the true and original "cat's cradle," for it was in the mystic Nile Land among the Pharaohs and the Pyramids that cats were not only domesticated, but held sacred, and turned not unfrequently into divinities, in whose honour temples were erected, and sacrifices and devotions offered up. Indeed, when a cat died in the house of a respectable Egyptian householder, it was customary for the whole family to shave off their eyebrows, and pay a special visit to the shrine of that "king of cats," Bubastes Pasht, whose astute wisdom and knowledge of men had doubtless descended to the far-famed companion of Lord Mayor Richard Whittington. This tone of mystery, this uncanniness, follows cats all through the pages of history. No respectable mediæval witch who ever wore a peaked hat, muttered charms, and took nightly exercise on a thoroughbred, fiery, untamed broomstick ever dreamt of going forth without the escort of her "familiar," and that spirit, as in the case of "Chim," the favourite of Sidonia the Sorceress, invariably took on himself the sable suit of a black cat. In fact, well-conducted witchcraft could not have got on at all except for the cats. Now, in these days of the clear dry light of science we have given up burning middle-aged witches, though maiden ladies will still devote their lives, their houses, their loves, and even their fortunes in legacy form, to cats. The superstitious notion, however, yet clings round them, for old sailors at sea believe that the frolics of a cat on board ship portend a storm, and there are country folk who still prophesy rain when they see a cat washing her face. When the domestic cat came to our islands is another point not known with certainty; but that it was a rarity in the days when the woods swarmed with wild cats is shown by an old Welsh law passed in the time of Howel the Good, who died a century before the Conquest, which fixed the price of cats according to their ages and qualities, beginning with the value of a kitten before it could see. It also enacted curious penalties to be inflicted on any one who stole or killed the cat that caught mice in the prince's granary, one of which was that the offender should forfeit as much wheat as, when poured on the victim, suspended by its tail, with its head touching the floor, would form a heap high enough to cover the tip of the tail. This shows that some one must have introduced the domestic variety; for the wild cats, like zebras, are absolutely untameable.

So much for their past record. We have now to ask what is the exact place the cat takes among us to-day, how it has obtained its proud position, and of what nature is the treaty established between mankind and the tiny tigers. Unlike the dog, who so proudly, and justly, claims to be the friend of man, the cat has made no compact with us. The dog rejoices in the companionship of man, shares his games and his sports, and does so with real and obvious delight; he will defend his master's life or property, and in all ways wishes to be considered and treated as an affectionate and devoted friend of the family. He gives love for love and sympathy for sympathy. But the cat insists on our loving her—popularly a cat is always "she"—will expect and insist on attention in the matter of food and head-scratchings and warmth; and will indicate her purring pleasure for immediate creature comforts in a fashion which is somewhat in the nature of an official vote of thanks. She will also develope extraordinary boldness, and leap on the shoulder or the lap, or coax slily round you with arched back and waving tail, after a fashion to delude you into the belief that her affection for you is quite unbounded; but all the same it is hard to resist the possible cynical belief that it is all pretence, and done from no motive of personal affection. No cat ever runs to welcome its master when he comes home, any more than it would leap with joy as do setters at the sight of a gun, or prick its ears as would horse or hound at the sound of a horn. The dogs knew Ulysses after his wanderings; but the cats of that gentleman's household, we may be sure, only yawned with a sort of "Dear me! you've been a long time away" expression, and retired to concoct fresh strategies concerning whatever was the Homeric equivalent for a canary. Buffon, who loved all animals, was, from a scientific point of view, as hard on cats as is the average street-boy who flings stones at them simply because they are cats, or the more unpardonable young man with a fancy terrier who sets his "tyke" to pull out the brindled fugitive who spits and snarls from behind the security of her fortress, the area-railings. That eminent naturalist firmly held that "the cat is incapable of affection, and retains, even in a domesticated state, its savage ferocity, merely restrained by selfishness and disguised by cunning"—which is in all truth a verdict of such severity that it would make an intelligent crocodile blush to hear it. In similar harsh strains other writers argue that cats only form an attachment for places and never for persons; and certain it is that no other animal has such a marvellous instinctive power of finding its way home from almost incredible distances to which it has been transported in the gloomy seclusion of a hamper, and this power is developed in the early days of kittenhood. Others, again, point out that the gratuitous cruelty shown by a cat in playing with and torturing an unhappy mouse before killing it is an extraordinary exception to the general rule observed by animals who kill and eat, but never delay long over the process. This characteristic may arise from a grim—we might almost say Grimalkin—sense of humour, beyond even the proverbial facetiousness of the Cheshire cat; but there is a curious method in their fun, for it has been noted that if the prey is a bird instead of a mouse the cat kills it instantly, as if aware of the greater danger of losing its victim.

On the whole, the body of evidence tells strongly against the cat, and yet in some fashion, notwithstanding its selfishness, its indifference, its puzzling ways, it has succeeded in making many friends, has been worshipped by the ancients, collected and made a splendid show of at the Crystal Palace, has given a name to a club instituted for its special culture, and, best tribute of all, has been adored by the ladies from time immemorial. On this side of the account must also be placed the fact that cats make excellent mothers, and watch over the morals and manners of their offspring with close attention, not neglecting, if needs be, to administer a sound box on the ear by way of a rebuke to a contumacious kitten who persists in acting disrespectfully, after due warning, to its mother's tail. Moreover, they form close attachments to individual members of their own species, and have by no means the character for recklessly indiscriminate alliance—akin to Thibetan polyandria—popularly attributed to them. Then they are really graceful and beautiful pets, singularly clean in their personal habits, taking, when looked after, quite a dandy care of their highly electric fur, so dry that it can be readily injured by water, which accounts for a cat's instinctive aversion to wet. As to their manners, if indeed it be true that they are haughty, reserved, and self-restrained in society, they are never vulgarly noisy or aggressively demonstrative, but, on the contrary, go in for the repose and "reserved force" style that marked the dignified behaviour of Lady Clara Vere de Vere, who, indeed, was somewhat feline in her ways. The fact is that it is high time some compromise should be effected. Mankind is cultivating its cats, and is disposed to be kind and polite to them; now let the cats reciprocate in turn, unbend a little, take a lesson from the dog's genial book—cats brought up with dogs are generally charming cats, with nice frank manners—and remember that they are distant cousins of the lordly lion, concerning whose "royal disposition" they can learn if they make a study of "As You Like It," and are not too critically inquisitive as to how lions got into the Forest of Arden. It has only to be known throughout the length and breadth of Cat-land what an interest is being taken in the whole tribe, and there is every reason for supposing that the rising generation of kittens will exhibit a new inclination to redeem the character of the species.

In spite of a speech for the defence equally ingenious, eloquent, and enterprising from Mr. Kemp, Q.C., Annie Frost, alias Mrs. Gordon-Baillie, was yesterday, at the Central Criminal Court, found guilty of repeated acts of fraud, and an adverse verdict was also returned in the case of the man Robert Percival Frost, whose name she had assumed, but of whom she was really not the wife. The Recorder marked his sense of the difference in culpability between the two offenders by sentencing the male prisoner only to eighteen months' hard labour, while on the female he inflicted the penalty of five years' penal servitude. The man Gigner, the pseudo-butler of the precious pair, who is accused of having filled the part of Job Trotter as an accomplice of this modern Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Jingle, has met with an accident while in prison, and was too ill to take his trial. Severe as the punishment to which the woman has been sentenced might seem, and small as was the actual amount of money for fraudulently obtaining which she was found guilty, there can be no kind of doubt that her conviction is an entirely righteous one, and that it was full time for society to be rid, at least for a considerable period, of "Mrs. Gordon-Baillie," with her specious pretensions to philanthropy, her almost unbounded fertility of knavish resource, her undoubted cleverness, and her highly insidious appearance of being "quite the lady." The case against her and her confederate Frost was simple enough. Frost, it is not denied, is a man of some education; he has been well brought up, and he has friends and connections, with considerable means, who would willingly have helped to extricate him from the abyss of rascality and at last positive crime into which he was gradually dragged. The real name of the so-called Annie Frost is White, she having been married to a person with that designation in 1876, her maiden name being Bruce. Her husband is now in Australia, and in that country the female prisoner was travelling last year, having previously assumed the now notorious cognomen of Gordon-Baillie. At the Antipodes she was joined by the man Frost, and the couple returned to England as Mr. and Mrs. Roberts; but shortly afterwards the female found it once more convenient to assume the Gordon-Baillie appellation. She started as a full-blown philanthropist; she sent blankets to the distressed cottage crofters; she ventilated vast schemes of emigration; and it must be admitted that she was from time to time in the receipt of large sums of money, the balance in her favour sometimes amounting to several hundreds of pounds, while at others it dwindled down to forty shillings. Her resources, from whatever channels they may have been obtained, being exhausted, she began to draw an extended series of what are familiarly known as "bogus" cheques, her usual modus operandi being to purchase goods from tradesmen, and to pay for the wares with a cheque exceeding by a few pounds the sum due. Thus she obtained the articles themselves, together with a certain amount of ready money, while the drafts on presentation were duly dishonoured.

The complicity of the man Frost in these shady transactions was proved by the counterfoils of the worthless cheques being in his handwriting. Meanwhile these equivocal financiers moved from furnished house to furnished house, more frequently not paying the entire rent due than paying it, and occasionally varying the bogus cheque trick by pawning small articles of furniture and bed linen, the property of their landlords. They lived in some style, and Gigner, who was frequently their emissary when the phantom cheques were negotiated, was dressed in a smart green livery; a hired brougham being also part of the apparatus of this remarkable firm. When the pertinacity of the bankers in the City in declining to cash cheques, to meet which there were no assets, had grown somewhat embarrassing, Mrs. Frost applied to a well-known banking firm in the West-end for permission to open a current account. Strange to say, the permission was granted, and a cheque-book was issued to her, but not one farthing was paid in to her credit, and she continued to draw worthless cheques until the number of thirty-nine were dishonoured. Again, it must be admitted in fairness to the male prisoner that his relatives showed commendable anxiety to take up his liabilities, and that some of the tradesmen who had complained of the cheques given to them having been dishonoured were paid in full. When, however, at the end of last June, the "Gordon-Baillie" bubble burst, and Frost, with his putative wife, and Gigner, the man in the smart green livery, were all arrested, the magistrate before whom they were brought, on ascertaining how extensive their transactions in bogus cheques had been, refused to allow the matter to drop, and invoked the aid of the Public Prosecutor. The evidence adduced at the trial at the Old Bailey showed that the woman Annie had, so far back as 1885, really paid in to the bank in the City sums ranging between six hundred and two thousand pounds. A further statement that the defendants had given ample information as to where they had pawned the articles taken by them from the furnished houses which they had occupied can only be considered as negatively favourable to them, since it is obvious that the mere act of pledging articles pertaining to a furnished house or lodging is one of direct swindling. The case as it related even to the pawning and the drawing of cheques upon an account which had no substantial existence was certainly strong enough against Frost and the woman Annie; but the latter found in her counsel an advocate whose hardihood in endeavouring to explain away her malfeasance may fairly be characterised as amazing. The learned and unabashed gentleman contended that she was a lady of position and fortune; that she had been sadly misrepresented; and that she was in reality an object of sympathy. As to her having assumed the name of Gordon-Baillie, he submitted that that circumstance had nothing to do with any criminal charge, and had only been introduced for the purpose of prejudicing the jury. The "lady of position and fortune," it was guilelessly suggested, might have acted improperly in her business connections with the male defendant, but there was nothing to bring the charge of fraud home to her; and, if the police had not interfered, the whole of the tradesmen would have been paid every farthing of their money.

The most edifying and, we may add, the most amusingly audacious assertion in the defence was that the pseudo Mrs. Gordon-Baillie had been perfectly justified in having acted in the manner she did; that the whole of the transactions were merely debts; and that if such a charge as this could be supported upon such evidence there was not a West-end milliner who could not prefer a similar accusation against a great number of persons who were on her books. A great number of persons! Surely the outside public should be infinitely grateful to the learned counsel for having torn the veil of mystery from the establishments of West-end milliners. If we are to believe this most ingenuous of advocates, it is the common practice of women with three or four aliases, and with no ostensible means of existence, to go about or send about, not only to milliners and dressmakers, but to butchers, bakers, and candlestick-makers, booksellers, and fishmongers, to purchase goods, pay for them in cheques drawn for three or four pounds over the amount due, receive the change, and then go on their way rejoicing, leaving the cheques to be dishonoured on presentation. It is quite possible that the woman Frost may have been in legitimate possession of large sums of money in 1885, and it is certain that she did pay very considerable amounts into the bank in the City; but we would ask how the case stood with the bank in St. James's-street, from which a cheque-book was obtained in the name of Annie Bodley Frost, who, without having paid one farthing into the account opened, proceeded to draw thirty-nine cheques, not one of which was honoured? Counsel for the defence went on to own that he could not produce evidence as to the source from which his client derived her income; but it was quite clear that at one period she had been worth two thousand a year, and she had only acted as hundreds of persons had done under similar circumstances. As to the conveyance to the pawnbroker's of the goods and chattels belonging to the landlords of the furnished houses, this wondrous expositor of Old Bailey ethics argued that, if any offence at all had been committed, it was "merely that of illegally pawning," and that every article would have been replaced long before the term of tenancy had expired. We do not controvert one part at least of this bold piece of reasoning. If the Gordon-Baillie-Frost firm had been able to tide over its little difficulties before exposure came, and if Frost's wealthy friends had taken up all the bogus cheques before that interference of the police which was so pathetically deprecated, we have no reason to doubt that the pawned clocks and the chimney ornaments, the sheets and pillow-cases would have been released from the custody of the three golden balls and replaced in the furnished houses. The idea of replacement, or of "making things straight," is not wholly foreign to the criminal mind ere it has become completely hardened and desperate. An historic firm of bill-brokers in the last generation used to say that they preferred to discount bills to which the acceptances were palpably forged, because such bills were almost invariably taken up even before maturity. The shop-boy who is a novice at robbing the till usually hopes to be able to replace the money which he has stolen in order to back Indictment for the Newgate Stakes; the fraudulent accountant, the dishonest clerk, the defaulting trustee very often intend and hope to be able to replace the funds which they have plundered or misappropriated if they have any luck; but the luck does not come, and at last the police "interfere." We will give the woman Frost quite as much credit as she deserves, but no more, for nourishing the persuasion that something might "turn up" financially advantageous to her or the man with whom she cohabited, and that by some stroke of fortune she might be at a future time in a position to pay all the fictitious cheques which she had drawn, and replace all the articles which she and her confederate had pawned. We do not the less consider her to have been an impudent and systematic swindler, trading under the mask of philanthropy and public spirit, who has dragged down her male associate to her own level of vulgar knavery, and who has justly met with her punishment.

The Secretary of State for War has replied, stating that he will be happy to meet the Lord Mayor Elect to-day in order to discuss the matter, and a conference has, therefore, been arranged for this afternoon.

PARIS DAY BY DAY.

[BY SPECIAL WIRE.]

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

PARIS, Wednesday Night.

Parisians are taking a good deal of interest in the marriage of Mdlle. Marcelle Boulanger with Captain Driant, which is to be celebrated on Tuesday, and of which I sent you some particulars yesterday. Invitations are now being sent out by both families. That on the Boulanger side runs as follows: "Madame Ernest Boulanger, Madame Paul Renouard, the General of Division, Deputy Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, and Madame Georges Boulanger have the honour to inform you of the marriage of Mademoiselle Marcelle Boulanger, their grand-daughter and daughter, with Monsieur Émile Driant, captain in the Fourth Regiment of Zouaves; and invite you to be present at the nuptial benediction which will be given them on Tuesday, October 30, 1888, at noon punctually, at the Church of Saint Pierre de Chaillot.—11 bis, Rue Dumont d'Urville." On the part of M. Driant the invitation reads: "Monsieur and Madame Driant have the honour to inform you of the marriage of Monsieur Émile Driant, Captain in the Fourth Regiment of Zouaves, their son, with Mademoiselle Marcelle Boulanger; and invite you, &c.—Pas en Artois (Pas de Calais)." There will certainly be a goodly gathering in the church and its vicinity. Many sympathisers will attend, and more perhaps will gather out of curiosity to see the bride and bridegroom, not to mention the lady's father. Admission to the church will, of course, only be obtained on presentation of the letters of invitation. The civil ceremony is fixed for Monday. It will take place at the Mairie of the Sixteenth Arrondissement. Only a few friends will attend. The bride's witnesses will be her grand-uncle, Mr. Griffith, and the General's intimate friend, Count Dillon; those selected by the bridegroom being his brother, M. Léon Driant, a notary in the department of the Aisne, and General Faverot de Kerbrech, who commands the Brigade of Dragoons stationed at Sedan. Madame Boulanger, the General's mother, was a Miss Griffith, a Welsh lady. If the weather remains fine the bridal party will have no reason to complain. A fog came on last evening, which lingered this morning until it was effectively dispelled by the rays of a brilliant sun; the weather to-day has again been superb.

A few days ago there was some speculation as to whether General Boulanger would respond to the invitation addressed to him by the Revision Committee, or would decline to enter into any further explanation of his programme. There was really no reason to suppose that the General would refuse to attend one of the Committee's sittings. He takes his place in the Chamber with a perfectly calm demeanour, listens to the debates, writes his letters, chats with his friends, and, in fact, comports himself like any of his colleagues; though with this difference, that he does not follow the example set him by some of them, and interrupt, shout, and hoot at regular intervals. So when the General received the Committee's invitation to be present at its meeting to-day, he did not hesitate for a moment, and this afternoon, in due course, he was asked a number of questions, to some of which he replied, while in regard to others he preferred to keep his views to himself. This was exactly what was to be expected by all who have some acquaintance with the General's opinions and attitude. He was perfectly frank so far as the main points of his programme were concerned, and if he objected to waste words over other matters, he merely showed that he wished some limit to be placed to the cross-examination in which certain of the committee-men took the opportunity of indulging. General Boulanger began by declaring that he would like revision to be carried out by a constituent assembly. He was for the dissolution of the Chamber, as the state of public opinion, clearly manifested at the general election, would compel the Senate to yield and consent to the revision of the constitution. In this, by the way, he is perfectly logical, and he has precedent on his side. Equally noteworthy was his remark that he regarded the restoration of the Monarchy as a sheer impossibility. Two-thirds of the nation would rise in opposition if any attempt were made in this direction. The General adheres to his views anent the Presidency of the Republic, for he added that he would vote for its abolition if a proposition to that effect were made. He wished the responsibility of all the officials, from the head of the State down to the lowest subordinate, to be properly defined, though he did not suggest the measures to be taken with a view to arriving at such a result. He considered that the constituent assembly could settle this and many other matters to the satisfaction of the country. Then, as regarded the question of the separation of Church and State, he thought that the nation ought to be expressly consulted with a view to ascertaining its wishes. What many will doubtless consider rather a home thrust was then aimed at the General. "How about politics in the army?" asked a member of the Committee. General Boulanger was quite ready with an answer. He declared then and there that the army ought to be kept aloof from politics, and that soldiers should on no account be allowed to vote. The General has so often been accused of desiring to introduce politics into the army that his declaration will hardly fail to excite some comment.

When General Boulanger, in reply to a question, said that a new Chamber favourable to revision would put such pressure on the Senate that the latter would be forced to vote it, M. Labordère asked what he would propose to do if the Upper House still resisted. The General answered that he could not affirm that he had not considered such an eventuality, but that he would confine himself to repeating what he had already said. M. Labordère then remarked that in the preamble to General Boulanger's bill there was a short paragraph in which the peril of dictatorship was foreseen. "So the peril does exist," continued M. Labordère; "would you kindly tell us how it can be averted?" This was a queer question, but the General promptly answered, "I have never affirmed that there was any danger of a dictatorship. If such a peril were to arise I should not take it upon myself to point out to the Constituante the measures which it ought to adopt." "So you have nothing to propose?" "Absolutely nothing," returned General Boulanger. M. Tony Revillon then addressed some questions to the General respecting the Presidency of the Republic. "Do you remember the election of 1848?" he asked. "Cannot you tell us what you think on the subject?" "No," was the determined answer. In another reply he exclaimed, "That is still the dictatorship. The Assembly might, in case of need, depose the head of the Executive." "That might be," retorted another member, "if the President were elected by the Assembly; but if he were chosen by universal suffrage, upon whom would the responsibility fall?" "I would have every one responsible, down to the smallest functionary," answered General Boulanger. M. Labordère objected that this was the régime of Napoleon III., who was responsible to the people, but had at the same time the sole right of consulting it. "We are coming to details," remarked the General. M. Labordère, however, maintained that this was a very important matter. General Boulanger replied that it was not the Empire now. He was as Republican and Democratic as any of the Committee. Had he not said that he would vote for the abolition of the Presidency, if it were proposed? When asked for his personal opinion on the question of the separation of Church and State, he replied that he was not bound to express it; the decision rested with the country. He would vote for the suppression of the Senate. If there were no President, the Executive might be composed of a Committee of three or five Directors. He was in favour of an Executive which should not be rendered subordinate to the Legislative body. When M. Mesureur inquired what would be the duty of the Republicans if a constituent Assembly restored the Monarchy, the General said, "I shall reply with another question. If you did not yield what would you do?" M. Mesureur answered, "But the party is an old one, and has its traditions." General Boulanger made the significant answer, "If Monarchy did not assure the liberty of universal suffrage I should agree with you in regarding insurrection as the most sacred of duties; but I am convinced that the great majority of the nation holds to the Republic. If any attempt were made to restore the Monarchy two-thirds of the people would rise." M. Bernard Lavergne then asked the General if, assuming that there were only one Chamber, he would prefer that it should appoint the President or leave his election to the people. "The Constituent Assembly would decide how the President should be nominated or deposed," answered the General; and, when pressed on this point, he replied that, perhaps, he had an opinion, but he kept it to himself. So closed this memorable examination in which General Boulanger merely said what he wished to say, declining to go into what he called details.

A brisk controversy is being carried on about the famous historic day which saw the formation of the Opportunist Rouvier Cabinet in 1887. The Conservatives, headed by Baron Mackau, backed up the Opportunists on that occasion for the sake of excluding General Boulanger, who was regarded as dangerous to peace, and friendly parleys and negotiations took place between M. Grévy, Baron Mackau, M. Ferry, and M. Rouvier on the subject. The most curious allegation made in connection with the controversy is that put forward this evening by the France, which states that M. Rouvier asked Baron Mackau to get the help of M. de Rothschild in the matter, as the Premier elect did not want to have his advent to office marked by a fall on the Bourse. The Cabinet was finally formed, according to the same paper, at two o'clock in the morning outside the Café de la Paix, which establishment M. Rouvier's friends were just obliged to quit.

Patti is coming to Paris once more. The approaching visit of the Diva is the talk of the hour in operatic circles, and even in those places of popular rendezvous, the clubs and cafés. The all-important and absorbing fact has been announced by M. Blavet, secretary of the Opera, through the columns of the Figaro, and also by the Gaulois, which informs its readers in impressive italics that Madame Adelina Patti will "create" the rôle of Juliette in M. Gounod's opera. M. Gounod has, in fact, touched up and embellished his old opera founded on the tragic history of the lovers of Verona, and the approaching revival of the work at the Paris Grand Opéra will have all the dignity of a first representation. Madame Darclée had been destined to create the new Juliet, but it appears that she became so timorous during the rehearsals that all hope of her co-operation in the revival had to be abandoned. M. Gailhard, one of the managers of the Opera, accordingly resolved to try his fortunes in the classic bowers of Craig-y-Nos. He took his departure from Paris with considerable fear and trembling, saying not a word to M. Gounod as to his intentions. Having crossed the boisterous sea, and made his way to the Welsh retreat of the great siren of song, Madame Patti accosted the manager as follows: "I wager that I know what brings you here; you are coming to make me an offer for the Exhibition." "No, Madame. The Opera is about to produce 'Romeo and Juliet;' will you be the heroine?" After having pondered a while, and remarked that she had engagements until the middle of November next, Madame Patti gave M. Gailhard a half promise. She sat down at the piano and tried the score of "Romeo and Juliet," in French, as she affected to be afraid of embarking in the rôle in any other language but Italian. Then she promised to let M. Gailhard have her reply in two or three days' time; and the manager, confident in the success of his important mission, returned to the Place de l'Opéra with the tidings of jubilation. It was only last evening that a despatch arrived from Craig-y-Nos, and when M. Gailhard received it he flourished it with exultation before the astounded gaze of M. Gounod, who could hardly believe the testimony of his eyes and spectacles when he read as follows:

> M. Gailhard, director of the Opera, Paris.—My Dear Colleague—I was deeply touched by your visit to me at Craig-y-Nos Castle. You invite me to the performance of an artistic masterpiece, conducted by the Master himself. My reply is, Yes.—Patti.

The grand musical ceremony which has thus been organised by M. Gounod and M. Gailhard will take place on Wednesday, Nov. 28 next, and all Paris—that is to say, all the members of the tout Paris who can afford to pay for seats on the auspicious occasion—will no doubt be there to see and hear. Adelina Patti first came to Paris in 1861, and in 1864 was the rage at the Théâtre Italien. La Patti is more familiar, in fact, to the average Parisian than any other singer of foreign nationality, and many a local cantatrice has envied her gains and glory. According to present arrangements M. Jean de Reszké will be Romeo, M. E. de Reszké will be Friar Laurence, M. Delmas Capulet, and M. Melchissédec Mercutio. M. Gounod will conduct the orchestra at the three first representations.

News of a determined duel by moonlight comes to-day from balmy Biarritz. It was fought by two young Spaniards of high family, who quarrelled on a very trivial pretext at a soirée given by the Baron de Bee. The combatants chose pistols, and as the moon did not sufficiently illumine the scene, candles and torches were placed in a sequestered part of the Baron's horticultural premises. Positions were taken up at twenty paces, and hardly had the word of command been given when one of the combatants fell shrieking to the ground. He had been shot through the right shoulder, the blade of which was fractured. The bullet was extracted by a surgeon after a little difficulty, and the wounded hidalgo was taken home, where he now lies, and is in a fair way to recovery. He is the son of a Spanish general. The seconds of the defeated combatant were Prince Oldenburg, a relative of the Czar, and Don Alfonso de Aldama, a young Carlist officer, while the victor was attended on the ground by Comte de Lesser and the Duke of Tamames, a grandee of Spain of the first class, husband of one of the daughters of the Duke of Alba, and a nephew by marriage of the Empress Eugénie. The pretext of the quarrel is described as futile; but it is possible that a dark-eyed señorita was at the bottom of it all.

Pontivy, a little village in France, is evidently a place prolific of considerable good luck to its inhabitants. Madame Loty, an honest bourgeoise who dwells there, has just been named as the winner of £4,000 in the Panama Lottery. Several years ago the Abbé Scheffer, also of rustic Pontivy, won the same amount of money in another lottery.

On the Bourse to-day the last quotations were: Three per Cents., 82f 50c (a rise of 7½c); Four and a Half per Cents., 105f 70c (no change); Italians, 96f 87½c (a rise of 30c); Turks, 15f 70c (a rise of 20c); Spanish Exteriors, 73f 80c; Egyptian Unified, 425f; Preference, 507f 80c; Ottoman Bank, 538f 12c. Suez Canal shares closed at 2,235f, and Rio Tinto at 623f 12c. There was a slight improvement in the attitude of French Three per Cents. to-day; but Four and a Half per Cents. underwent no change. Spanish Exteriors, which at one time rose to 73f 75c, also closed at the same rate as yesterday. On the other hand, Italians, Turks, and Hungarians were active. There was a rise of 2f 50c in Egyptian Unified. The Russian Loan of 1880 closed as yesterday; but there was a rise of 5f in Suez Canal shares. On the Petite Bourse to-night the closing prices were: Turks, 15f 72c; Spanish Exteriors, 73¾f; Egyptian Unified, 423f 43c; Ottoman Bank, 537f 50c; and Rio Tinto, 621f 87c.

The annual dinner of the Constitutional Union, which was postponed from June last, will be held at the St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, on Nov. 14, when the Right Hon. Edward Stanhope, M.P., will preside. Among the speakers will be the new Lord Advocate for Scotland (Mr. J. P. B. Robertson, M.P.), and others. The galleries will be reserved for ladies on this occasion.

Two new archdeaconries will shortly be constituted within the diocese of Wakefield, and it is understood that Canon Straton, Vicar of Wakefield, and Canon Brooke, Vicar Elect of Halifax, will receive the appointments.

The vicarage of Sutton St. Helens, which is in the gift of King's College, Cambridge, has been filled up by the Patronage Committee of the college by the appointment of the Rev. M. F. B. Birney, curate of St. Andrews, Bishop Auckland, who is an Exhibitioner of the college, and took a Second Class in the Theological Tripos in 1883. The vicarage of Sutton is worth £600 per annum, with a vicarage.

At the seventh annual meeting of the York Diocesan Conference, yesterday, his Grace the Archbishop of York, who presided, announced that he had received a gift of £20,000 from Mrs. Charles Turner, of Liverpool, and Ferriby, Yorkshire, for the formation of a fund for pensioning incumbents belonging to the diocese of York who feel themselves incapacitated from work. From the same generous hand, said his Grace, a like gift had been lately bestowed on the diocese of Liverpool. It was further announced that Lord Grimthorpe had offered £3,000 towards the promotion of a scheme for procuring a Bishop of Beverley as a Suffragan Bishop of York, and as soon as the fund offered even a moderate income application would be made for the purpose.

THE WHITE PASHA AND THE MAHDI.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.]

SUAKIN, Oct. 24.

The death of the Khalifa Abdullah, the Mahdi's successor, at Khartoum, is reported from various sources, but reliable confirmation is still wanting.

The enemy continue very active, firing shells nightly on the forts and town from several guns, doing, however, little or no damage.

CAIRO, Oct. 24.

Natives who have arrived at Wady Halfa confirm the previous reports of the appearance of a white Christian in the Bahr-el-Gazelle Province. He is described as having a large force and as marching northward, driving the Dervishes before him. It is also said that the Khalifa Abdulla had despatched three steamers, with 3,000 men, against him, before the festival of Ramadan, and that no news had been received of that expedition since that period. The same natives report that the adherents of the Mahdi have no influence in Darfour and very little in Kordofan. Walad-el-Njumi, the Dervish leader, is still at Dongola, as he finds some difficulty in collecting his forces, but will probably start on his march northward on Nov. 8.

VIENNA, Oct. 24.

The Political Correspondence publishes the contents of the letter from Slatin Bey to his relatives in Vienna, which was recently forwarded through Osman Digma to the Governor of Suakin for transmission to its destination. In this communication Slatin Bey announces the receipt of a letter sent by his relatives in November, 1886, which, however, only reached him twenty months after the date of despatch. He relates that after resisting the Mahdists in Darfur for two years, he was at length compelled to surrender. Since then he had been with Khalifa Seid Abdullah, who became so much attached to him that he refused to part with him, and would not agree to his release for any ransom, however large. In conclusion, Slatin Bey asks his friends to send him a few newspapers. Accompanying the letter is a communication from the Khalifa to Slatin's relatives, in which he asks them, and, in fact, any Austrian, to visit Slatin Bey, in order that they may convince themselves of his excellent position. He promises them a safe conduct.

GERMAN COURT AND POLITICS.

[TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

BERLIN, Oct. 24.

It is now stated that the Emperor will stop at Friedrichsruh on his way back from Hamburg, so that Prince Bismarck shall not be compelled to come to Berlin to make his report to his Sovereign. The Kaiser and Kaiserin are now not expected in Berlin much before the beginning of December.

On Friday Count von Moltke will attain his eighty-eighth year, having been born on Oct. 26, 1800. The Post devotes to the great tactician a leading article which gives a sketch of the peculiar popularity enjoyed by the renowned Field-Marshal, a popularity which is a mixture of love and reverence rather than the admiration generally understood under this name. Von Moltke became Chief of the General Staff in 1858.

Professors von Bergmann and Gerhardt had the honour of dining with the Kaiser and the Imperial family to-day.

KING MILAN'S DIVORCE.

[TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

VIENNA, Oct. 24.

The scene between the King of Servia and the Metropolitan Theodosius of Belgrade, reported in one of my recent despatches, has had a prompt sequel. A dissolution of the marriage has been pronounced by that dignitary between King Milan and Queen Natalie. The official documents were published at Belgrade to-day. It is no secret that the Servians were opposed to a separation, and on the King's return to Belgrade not a fortnight ago he found things even less favourable than before he left. He seems to have taken the bull by the horns, and, either by persuasion or other means, to have brought the Metropolitan round to his own way of thinking in a remarkably short space of time. It now remains to be seen whether the Queen will submit quietly to the verdict of that ecclesiastical authority. Many people think not, and expect to see her set up pretensions to the Servian throne under the auspices of Russia. In that case King Milan's position will not be an enviable one.

GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

CHICAGO, Oct. 24.

The convention of British-American Associations has resolved to form a National British-American Association of the United States. Among the objects of this society will be the promotion of good feeling and harmony between the United States and Great Britain and her colonies. The society, by its constitution, calls upon those citizens who are naturalised to exercise their rights on all possible occasions, and urges all who are not naturalised to become citizens, and declares that all should regard the ballot as a sacred trust.

THE COAL STRIKE.

A meeting of West Yorkshire colliery proprietors was held yesterday at the Great Northern Hotel, Leeds. The meeting was private, but at the close a copy of the following resolution was supplied as having been adopted: "That the coal owners present at the meeting held this day at the Great Northern Hotel, Leeds, reaffirm their previous resolutions, and pledge themselves one and all to refuse any advance to the men at the present time, and under no circumstances to allow their pits to work at any advance on present wages." The meeting extended over two hours, and the proceedings were very animated, there being some difference of opinion as to the course to be pursued. The effect of the resolution will be that to-day 10,000 miners in Yorkshire will cease work, their notices having expired. Yesterday afternoon thousands of men in the Normanton and Wombwell districts came out. A large number of workmen employed at various collieries in South Yorkshire have also struck.

Our Barnsley correspondent telegraphs: "Information received at the headquarters of the Yorkshire Miners' Association up to this (Wednesday) evening show that the strike throughout South-West Yorkshire to-day has been unusually large. It is almost impossible to give details of collieries and numbers, so general is the movement. Mr. Pickard, M.P., estimates that about 30,000 miners and workmen would have ceased work at six o'clock to-night, whilst several thousands will strike to-morrow. Most large firms in South Yorkshire who own collieries, including Messrs. Cammell and Co., Sir John Brown and Co., Thorncliffe and Co., have nearly all their pits down. At many places almost every person employed is idle. Miners were never more united, and are encouraged by the concessions made in other counties. In Yorkshire, according to latest advices, eleven firms have conceded an advance to 5,000 men, Hoyland Silkstone, East Gawber, Birley, and Wharncliffe Carlton making terms to-day. Great stress has been laid upon the limited funds of the Yorkshire Miners' Association, but the officials are assured by other districts where the advance has been conceded that, if Yorkshire is made the battleground of the whole question, abundant assistance will be forthcoming."

It is announced that the men in the employ of the Lilleshall Company, Shropshire, of which Lord Granville is the principal proprietor, have accepted an offer of 4d per day increase, and have agreed to commence work on those conditions on Monday next.

In Derbyshire the strike is spreading, and it is expected that the men will be successful, as the masters, in contrast to the men, are not unanimous in their action. The proprietors at Boythorpe have given a 10 per cent. advance. Last evening the men came out at Grassmoor, Holmwood, Long Spilsby, Shirecaks, and Eckington. If the Clay Cross proprietors were to give an advance it is believed that the strike would collapse.

At the London Coal Exchange yesterday a further advance of 1s per ton took place in the price of house coal, the following being the prices now current: Wallsend Hetton, 21s; Lambton, 20s 6d; Tees, 21s; Radcliffe, 18s 6d; Hetton Lyons, 19s 6d; Auckland Park, 19s 6d; Wear, 19s 6d; Lambert's Tanfield, 12s 3d.

SERIOUS INJURY TO A FIREMAN.

Yesterday afternoon, a little after twelve o'clock, a fire broke out in Upper Marylebone-street, on the premises of E. Coppen, oil and colour man. Some plumbers had been at work, and it is stated that it was through their carelessness that the outbreak was caused. The firemen had to wait some minutes for water, and when standpipes were got to work the flames were blazing all over the building, and were bursting from the basement so strongly that they rose some 20ft in the air. The Scotland-yard steamer began to pump water into the building, Firemen Bonner and Barratt holding the branch or nozzle. When it was thought the fire had been sufficiently subdued the two men got over the railings in front of the house, and, removing the grating, began to pour water into the basement. It became necessary to move the branch from one side to the other, and in doing this Barratt missed his footing in the dense smoke and suddenly fell into the basement. The heat here at the time must have been terribly intense, and the unfortunate man shouted piteously for help. His comrade ran back to the engine and procured a "long line," one of which is always carried with the engines for the purpose of pulling hose up to the top of buildings. Returning with this, and aided by several firemen and bystanders, Bonnor made desperate efforts to release his comrade. Barratt at once seized the rope, but when he had been drawn half-way up the heat and smoke overcame him, and he fell back. Again and again he caught hold of the rope and was partially pulled up, only to fall again into the burning basement. At last, when those around were almost in despair, the unhappy man was pulled up so far that his head and shoulders appeared above the ground, and a half-score of hands seized him and pulled him out. He was fearfully burnt over the face, hands, and body, and was placed in a cab and removed to the Middlesex Hospital, where the surgeons expressed the fear that his case was virtually hopeless, and said that if he lived he would be totally blind. Last night he was still alive, but in the same precarious condition. The fire was extinguished after about two hours' work.

MR. W. H. SMITH AT SALFORD.

Yesterday the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, M.P., made an inspection of the Manchester Ship Canal works now in progress between Manchester and Barton. He was accompanied by Sir William Houldsworth, M.P., and Sir J. C. Lee, the deputy-chairman of the Ship Canal Company. Subsequently he was entertained at luncheon by the Mayor of Salford (Mr. Alderman Dickins), in the Council Chamber of the Town Hall. The company included several ladies. At the conclusion of the luncheon, after the customary loyal toasts, the Mayor proposed "The First Lord of the Treasury." In the course of his reply Mr. Smith referred to the extraordinary work which he had that morning visited, and the marvellous appliances by which it was being so rapidly accomplished. Beyond doubt the ancient and loyal borough of Salford would be greatly benefited by the enlarged intercourse with the world which would spring from the new canal. Although it might happen that the railway interests would for a time suffer from their enterprise, his confident belief was that the ultimate result would be to augment their prosperity. The right hon. gentleman went on to allude to the part which her Majesty's Government had taken in promoting the interests of municipal institutions by passing the Local Government Act. It was the greatest mistake in the world to suppose that all the duties of a Minister of State were necessarily connected with party politics and sectional differences. On the contrary, their most important administrative functions had no more to do with politics than the brick walls of that chamber had to do with the waters of the contemplated canal. It was their duty to watch daily the pulse of the national industries, to concern themselves with the progress of events abroad and in the maintenance of the greatest of British interests—the peace of England and the world. In conclusion Mr. Smith proposed "Prosperity to the Borough of Salford," which was acknowledged by Mr. Alderman M'Kerrow.

The War Office has called for a return of all officers of the militia, yeomanry, cavalry, and volunteers who are members of the House of Lords. A similar return of members of the House of Commons was obtained a short time since.

Messrs. Cook and Son learn by telegram from their Athens agent that the line recently injured by floods between Corinth and Athens is now re-opened for traffic.

THE NEW WIMBLEDON.

As a result of the preliminary inspection of the Brighton sites, which took place on Tuesday, it is understood that Captain St. John Mildmay, secretary of the National Rifle Association, will report favourably to the committee to whom the Council have delegated the duty of discovering a new ground for the annual prize meeting of volunteer shooters. Captain Mildmay, who was accompanied by Mr. Hoey, was received by Colonel Tester and Captain Edwardes, and these officers, on behalf of the Mayor of Brighton, conducted the visitors first to the West Blatchington Valley, which is not far removed from West Brighton, and here it was demonstrated that every facility could be provided for shooting and for camping, the only objection alleged being the probable heavy cost of the land, which in a few years will no doubt become eligible for villa plots. The party next proceeded to the Waterhall site, consisting of a long and of a shorter valley, enclosed within high downs, and situated between the Dyke-road and the main line of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway. This spot was not approved on account of suggested difficulties in planning out the longer-distance ranges, and it was believed that the undulating character of the land would render a continuance of the mounted competitions on the old lines impossible. Passing under the railway the experts went on to the Patcham site, which lies close to the Ladies' Mile. This favourite locality is within ten minutes' drive of the proposed railway station at Patcham, to the north of the tunnel, and if a spur line were made to connect the camp with the railway it would bring it into direct communication with London and Brighton. Every argument which has been advanced in support of the alternative sites on the Brighton Downs has been applied to this acreage, which, moreover, has, it is urged, additional advantages, and fulfils every demand put forward on behalf of the Association, both as regards its present needs and its probable future developments. If the land can be obtained at reasonable cost the Sites Committee are expected to examine into the recommendations carefully on the occasion of a second visit; but it is still an open question whether Lord Wemyss and his associates upon the committee will decide that the reconsideration of the Brighton sites is included in the terms of the reference to the committee by the Council, as the object specially in view was the selection of some site nearer to the metropolis than either Cannock Chase or the Berkshire Downs. Since the last meeting of the Council some four or five areas, none of them more than thirty-five miles from London, have been submitted, but nothing definite has been done in regard to them. Amongst the Sussex sites is that of Lewes, which Captain Mildmay also visited. It is said to be in some respects more suitable than those of Brighton, and it affords a flatter field than Berkshire, with downs, or natural butts, of a loftier altitude than those at Compton. The drawback in this case is that the direction of fire would be towards the sea, roughly from north to south. There are no crossing roads to be considered. The town of Lewes is fifty miles from London, and is only a few minutes' railway ride from Brighton and from Eastbourne. On the 30th inst. the Sites Committee will wait upon Mr. Stanhope, at the War Office, in order to ask if the Government will be prepared to assist the Association to obtain a substitute for Wimbledon-common.

ARMADA RELICS AT DRURY-LANE.

Antiquarians from all parts of the country, literary men of distinction, and fashionable people of both sexes, assembled yesterday afternoon in the Grand Saloon of Drury-lane Theatre to admire, comment on, and criticise the finest collection of Elizabethan relics that the Armada Tercentenary has yet produced. It was appropriate that the young Earl of Winchilsea and Nottingham, a descendant of one of the most famous of the Armada patriots, should open to the public this collection of remarkable historical and archæological value, and it was natural that he should descant on the loyalty of his ancestors, and draw a somewhat pessimistic parallel between the Elizabethan and Victorian eras. Whether it be true, as hinted by Lord Winchilsea, and insisted on by Mr. Henry Millett, the owner of the terrible torture-chair of the Inquisition here exhibited, that the Spanish galleons contained a supply of these diabolical instruments, and "that these instruments show what would have occurred in nearly every English town if the Armada had been successful," need not be now a subject for controversy. Englishmen can only trust that the same pluck that defeated the Armada would, if luck had gone against us, have resisted the torture-chair as an institution at the market crosses of Old England. However, the torture-chair in question was one of the most popular exhibits. It attracted round it all day an admiring and shuddering crowd, and the speaker of the occasion used it as a text to illustrate, with great taste and not a little force, the apathy of the age and the unpreparedness of the English navy. At the conclusion of Lord Winchilsea's graceful lecture due honour was paid to the enterprise and public spirit of Mr. Augustus Harris, who, in returning thanks, reminded his audience that he had received encouragement and sympathy, in his arduous undertaking, from the Government, who had ransacked the cellars of the Tower in his service, down to the promoters and exhibitors of the Plymouth Armada Exhibition, who were represented by Mr. W. H. K. Wright, who descanted on the remarkable completeness, historic value, and liberal worth of the collection. Mr. Edwin Brett, Mr. Seymour Lucas, A.R.A., and the Baron de Cosson, exhibit here some of their priceless armour, the curios are as varied as they are valuable, and the lover of pictures, old books, and miscellaneous relics will find in the vestibules of old Drury a mass of antiquarian lore that the British Museum and South Kensington combined might well envy. As Mr. Wright very justly observed, the very catalogue will ultimately have a distinct value of its own as showing where the relics of three centuries ago are to be found. In the course of his interesting remarks Lord Winchilsea suggested a very pretty and graceful image. He compared the student taking down an old volume from some library and finding there concealed a lock of hair or withered leaf, with the enthusiast who repairs to Drury-lane to see a modern play, and is brought face to face with history embalmed in priceless relics. It is certain that visitors to the "Armada" will now come away with a clearer and more accurate notion of an age second to none in the varied and picturesque history of Old England. The cheers which greeted Mr. Harris showed that he had once more been the author of a "happy thought," and had carried it into thorough execution.

HALFPENNY DINNERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

Sir—For the last four years, through the great kindness of your readers, we have had dinners for the poor East London children. Last year over 40,000 dinners were provided at the cost of £132 2s 5d, including all expenses. May I again beg them to help support an old charity, otherwise the dinners cannot be begun, for we have not £4 in hand? Might I also ask if any refreshment contractor, hotel proprietor, or confectioner, could give me scraps for making soup for invalids, or waste bread for the dinners?—Yours faithfully,

PRISCILLA A. JAY.

Exhibition of Turnery.—The Worshipful Company of Turners opened their twentieth annual exhibition of specimens of turning at the Mansion House yesterday. The exhibits are divided into four sections—diamonds, glass, stone, and pottery, and the whole collection forms an interesting and artistic show. In addition to giving the freedom of the company, silver and bronze medals, and certificates of merit to the best competing workmen, the company have voted £50 for money prizes for the encouragement of turnery. A number of interesting objects, not for competition, are shown, including some valuable diamonds, and several articles made out of a piece of marble taken from Westminster Abbey during the repairs which are now going on. A potter at his wheel also attracts considerable attention by his dexterous manipulation of the clay at his disposal. To-morrow the prizes will be distributed by the Lord Mayor.
